Nursery school prescription

A feeling of well-being and a delight in learning

A child's first experience in a learning situation should leave him with a feeling of success.

With this attitude, Mrs. Sharon Freker supervises the Woodview Nursery School in Oshawa.

"A Nursery School serves the needs of young children," says Freker, "by offering them experiences adapted to what is known about growth needs at the age of three and four years.

"There is increased evidence of the significance of the experiences in the first years of life and of the effect on adult behavior.

"The nursery school shares with parents the responsibility for promoting sound growth in a period when growth is rapid and important — just as the elementary school shares this responsibility with parents of the elementary school-age child.

"Nursery schools are of value as a supplement to family life, offering support to parents, and providing the opportunity to observe children and discuss what they see with someone who is qualified to interpret behavior to them.

"Nursery school offers rich and varied opportunities through its equipment and curricula to children, so that the needs of every child will be adequately met. It provides an atmosphere of understanding and acceptance, which in turn helps the child to understand and accept himself, as well as others.

"Parents often ask their children, 'Why did you do that?'

"Usually the child does not know why. He is not aware of his feelings, such as anger or frustration, much less how to deal with such feelings. A nursery school teacher, through her training and understanding of young children, can help a child recognize what he is feeling, and help him cope with these, by guiding him to find pleasurable and acceptable outlets for such feelings.

"If a child likes and accepts himself, he will find it much easier to like and accept others, and thus function positively in his society.

"Parents often wonder if a child will be bored in kindergarten if he attends nursery school.

"Usually, just the opposite is true. Studies have shown that nursery school children do much better throughout their academic life. A nursery school child is provided with the opportunity to play alone, or with others, or beside others. Through co-operative play, social skills are developed.

"First nursery school experiences are essentially individual ones, with increasing exploration of group activities. As a child goes from his home into a nursery group, into kindergarten and on into the primary grades of the elementary school, he moves into atmospheres of gradually increasing formality and more rigidly structured programs of activities, for which he is better prepared.

"Nursery school equipment can help children learn how to handle their bodies in different positions. Keeping in mind that pre-school children are very active, daily opportunities for vigorous large-muscle development and co-ordination are provided, as well as activities to promote fine motor co-ordination (a pre-requisite to printing.)

THINKING TOOLS CALLED "CONCEPTS"

"Parents are often pleasantly surprised that their children 'learn things, too'." The child develops the beginnings of skills, and builds concepts basic to all fields of knowledge. He learns at his age level, and at his individual rate, what will be a foundation for his later learning. Children have to acquire certain basic thinking tools called "concepts". Concepts of objects, concepts of direction, such as "up" and "down", or "inside" and "outside"; concepts of space, time, speed and sequence — that is, "far" and "near", "today" and "yesterday", "before" and "after". They need to be able to identify, classify, generalize, differentiate and symbolize. These processes involve recognizing, noticing similarities and differences, being able to consider the qualities of objects, such as "size", "color", "shape", etc., and being able to classify objects and events according to the qualities they share or do not share.

"To acquire all these understandings, a child needs first and most basically, a wide variety of repeated concrete experiences. Both the variety and the chance for repetition are essential. A child masters the quality of objects through his own relationship to them.

"At Woodview Nursery School, we have strived to provide an atmosphere where a child's first experience in a learning situation will leave him with a feeling of success, not failure. Success in the sense that he experiences a feeling of well-being with himself and his world, the delight of learning, and an eagerness for this experience to continue."

Parents are invited to visit the school at any time in Woodview Community Centre, corner of Cadillac Ave. North and Beverly St. The school is in session each morning from 9 to 11:30.

Please, Margaret, cut it out!

One of the weekend magazines distributed in Oshawa by the three big Toronto papers Saturday carried a story about moonlighting — the dubious, but often necessary "art" of holding down two jobs.

Is that where Margaret got it?

We wonder.

Controller Margaret Shaw came out swinging on Monday calling Mayor Bruce Mackey "the biggest moonlighter in the city."

We first heard of it as a result of CKLB news broadcast, Monday. Number One Son came running into the kitchen. "Guess what, the mayor has been charged!"

With what, was the question of his elders.

"Well, something about moonlight, it said."

So we tuned in.

But no. No juicy tidbits. Nothing. Just another shouting match and not an unfamiliar one at that.

The newscast went like this: "Oshawa's Mayor Bruce Mackey has been charged with being the biggest moonlighter in the city."

And it went on:

"Controller Margaret Shaw, said we already have a full-time mayor but he is never in his office.

"Controller Shaw suggested that if the city manager-executive committee form of government was ruled out by the Ontario Municipal Board because of the lack of a two-thirds majority vote last week, the mayor would not run for office again because he would lose too much business from his law firm.

"Mayor Mackey commented that Controller Shaw's statements were "utter nonsense." The Mayor said he regarded a full-time job as a 40-hour a week proposition, but that he works on the average over 55 hours a week.

"Mayor Mackey said the city administrator form of government would leave the mayor free to handle more of the policy making decisions and the more important aspects of city business related to the people.

"He added that much of his work at present is taken up with administrative duties which should not be handled by a mayor at all. Mayor Mackey said a mayor should not be burdened with the administrative problems at city hall but with council and city policies."

Perhaps it would have been better for his worship to remain his usual calm and collected self instead of answering the controller's remarks. But it would seem the mayor decided this week that "enough's enough" and he labelled Mrs. Shaw's statements as the "utter nonsense" which is all they are.

What is sad though, is that the image of all our politicians at city hall suffers. In this time when close communication between electorate and government is of vital importance, it's a shame to see a feeling of trust and respect in one's local government destroyed by exchange of nonsense and stupidity between government officials.

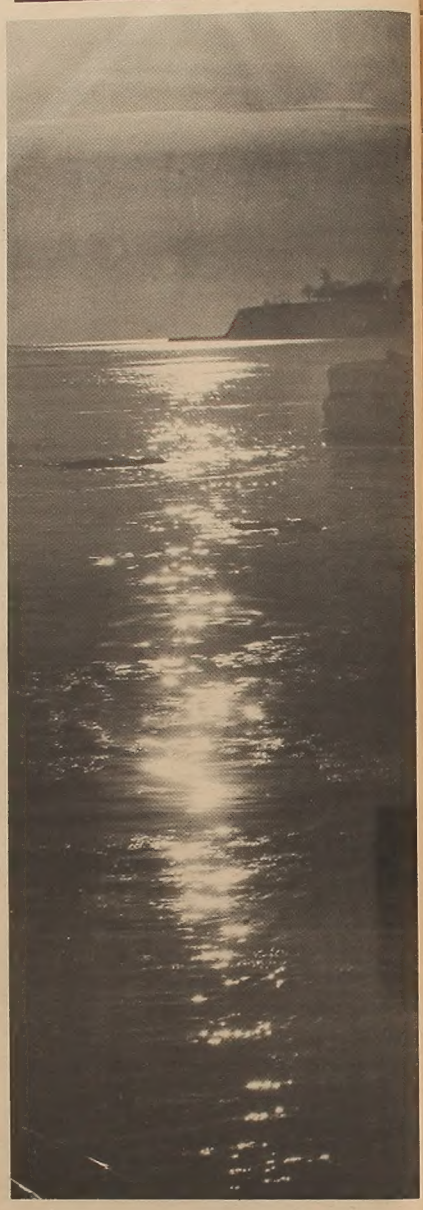
Please cut it out, Mrs. Shaw, and all you others as well.

Drinking driver public enemy

"If we could eliminate all causes of highway accidents but one, we would still be faced with 50 per cent of the problem — drinking and driving."

This statement by Howard Pyle, president of the National Safety Council of the United States, is drawn from research and statistics compiled by his organization. It concludes in no uncertain terms that the drinking driver is a menace on the highway, by far the major cause of violent death, injury and accident.

In 1969, for example, a total of 56,400 Americans died in traffic accidents, and more than half of these deaths were caused by drinking drivers. Some 28,000 lives might have been saved last year if drivers had either refrained from drinking altogether or had drunk in such a way that their skill and judgment would not have been impaired — and that means waiting at least one hour per average drink before attempting to drive, according to the council.



Under normal circumstances, the council points out, the driver's brain constantly receives information which helps him keep his vehicle moving safely through traffic. Alcoholic beverages hinder this process in many ways. Because the driver's senses are dulled, the information his brain receives may be distorted. His judgment is impaired and his normal inhibitions are dulled. He cannot think as clearly, quickly, or rationally as he normally does.

In addition, alcohol dulls the driver's awareness of the degree to which he is impaired. The drunken driver develops a false sense of confidence, endangering himself and everyone on the road with him.

Alcohol is a depressant which acts as an anesthetic on the central nervous system. It is absorbed directly into the blood from the stomach and intestines and carried through to all parts of the body — including the brain. Alcohol first affects the cerebrum, the center of the brain that controls judgment. Reflexes are slowed, co-ordination is impaired, visual acuity is reduced, hearing is adversely affected, and concentration becomes difficult.

Concentration of alcohol in the bloodstream is determined by: the amount of alcohol consumed; the length of time since drinking began; the length of time since the last drink; body weight; the quantity and kind of food in the stomach at the time of drinking. The system eliminates alcohol through excretion and metabolism, and these process usually take about one hour per drink. Black coffee, cold showers, and physical exercises may make the drinker more alert, but they do not make him more sober. Drivers should allow at least one hour per average drink to regain the muscular co-ordination, visual acuity, and good judgment necessary to operate a motor vehicle.

If we could get the drunken driver off the road, we might eliminate about 28,000 needless deaths each year in the United States, and a proportionate number in Canada. If it takes a heavy hand by police and the courts to accomplish this, in the absence of common sense on the part of motorists, then that type of action will have to be pursued relentlessly.

Freedom in peril

In a recent speech, J. C. McRuer, former Chief Justice of Ontario and now engaged in an inquiry into civil rights, The Financial Post notes, went straight to the heart of the question posed by increasing violence in society.

He said: "In the relationship of the law to the individual constant vigilance is necessary to see to it that the law does not put in the hands of those in authority unrestricted power to destroy freedom, and that those who enjoy freedom under law have not uncontrolled power to destroy the freedom of others."

The Post says that mounting violence in the U.S. is clearly bringing unreasoned reaction and stiffening resistance to change. The impasse raises the spectre of an increasingly police-dominated state and all the evils that go with it. If this is not what we want in Canada, The Post comments that these McRuer words are exceedingly pertinent to those with authority as well as those without it.

Chronicles of Osh

1. And in the third week of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy it came to pass that clouds of darkness in great multitude gathered together over the head of the Chronicler of Osh and he was sore afraid, yea, even aching and quite upset as the people of the land of Osh vernaculared in those days, and with the Chronicler the people of Osh also were disgusted.

2. And there were many among the people of Osh, including the Chronicler, who were girding their loins to go up and wear sack cloth.

3. And they spoke unto one another, as the Chronicler spoke unto his own kin, saying wherewithall shall webeclothed and whatwithall shall we eat and howithall shall the elders of the land of Osh, yea even the High and Mighty John and his servant Darcy upon the Holy Mountain of Qupee rule the people.

4. And amid these tribulations in the land of Osh there were many voices heard. And one was from the woman who had first been known as Leta, the controller of the broken drainpipes.

5. Now Leta was a woman of much vigorous speaking and she let herself be heard muchly in the chamber of the land of Osh as she gathered together with the elders of the land of Osh.

6. And above Leta great clouds that threatened her elimination as an elder of stature were gathering. For the elders of the land of Osh had spoken unto her and unto the woman Thom and unto Fin and unto Charles the Physician among the elders saying, behold, we shall wipe you off the face of the land of Osh, in that you shall no longer be the four mighty elders of the land of Osh but just plain elders.

7. Moreover had the elders spoken, saying behold we shall bring unto the people of Osh a henchman of much power who shall hench at the right hand of the chief ruler of Osh, much as the servant Darcy henches for the H and M John on the Holy Mountain of Qupee.

8. Now the words spoken by the elders of Osh did not find favor in the eyes of Leta, and she started to speak in familiar but loud tones, saying, behold the chief ruler of Osh. (For Leta had taken unto herself the chief ruler to let go upon his head with both barrels, so to speak.)

9. And she spoke for all the people of the land of Osh to hear, saying, the chief ruler of the land of Osh lights moon muchly, and he is never in the Temple of Osh when we want him, and he spends too much time making a buck out of his business of advocating for those who need an advocate.

10. Moreover spoke Leta, saying behold the chief ruler will not return unto the people of the land of Osh to rule unless he eliminates my status as an elder of stature in the land of Osh, to be replaced by a henchman.

11. Now the words spoken by Leta left the Wayward Beevee, chief ruler of Osh, exceedingly wrath and he spoke saying, woman, what sayest thou. And he arose and spoke saying the words spoken by Leta were nonsense that was utter indeed, and he said the chief ruler of Osh should not be accused of lighting moon or lighting at all for that he labored diligently and exceedingly hard for the people of the land of Osh.

12. And among the people of the land of Osh there were many who spoke saying wish Leta would let up.

13. Now in the land of Whit also there was much shouting as two new voices raised themselves among the Whitites to bring unto them identity and pride and a sense of well-being. And one of the new voices in the land of Whit was Argos and the other was Round, like unto the world.

14. And the Whitites, yea even the Pharaoh of Whit, were exceedingly joyful in that they could shout also as Whitites, privately.

15. And as the Chronicler of Osh reviewed all these things and gazed into his ball that said sooth he was much relieved and some of his own clouds of darkness were drifting away over the horizon in the direction of the land of the Bowmans and all those that were afar off.

Peace is something you achieve through love of your fellow men

by Randy Sorochan
Donevan Collegiate

After reading recent publicity about student violence, and especially after reading a letter written by a student Susan Shetler, I have decided to add my two cents worth.

I am not a student radical nor do I preach student violence. I would say I am a sophisticated, intelligent and level headed thinking student who tries to see things in this manner.

May I freshen our memories by using Sue's opening statement, "I am totally against "student riots" unless of course, if they are for a totally worthy and reasonable cause."

TOTALLY WORTHY

The so-called student riot or as I would prefer to name it, peace demonstration, at Kent was in my mind for a "totally worthy and reasonable cause" — peace.

It was to stop an unnecessary war in Vietnam which is spreading into Cambodia; keeping American businessmen fat and wealthy; killing men on both sides needlessly (because a Communist takeover of this area is inevitable); causing very difficult internal problems for the United States and President Nixon; and has also nearly assured the people of the United States that Nixon will not be their next great leader come the 1973 election.

As for student violence not spreading into Canada even for the very unwisely chosen time of 10 years, as stated by two Oshawa men, I am sorry to report that the guess of 10 years is 10 years and three weeks late. We already know of the violence and student unrest across Canada and especially in Toronto.

I agree that writing letters presenting reasonable facts and arguments is a very polite way of going about things and trying to achieve your goals. But tell the negroes in the southern parts, and even the northern parts of the U.S. this. And while you're at it, you can also try and tell the relatives and friends of people who have been killed in Vietnam or Cambodia to send a letter to their congressman and tell him to stop the war.

Therefore, I say beneficial, no.

Letters can only go so far and say so much and then after a while they are ignored because they say the same thing over and over again, until the message gets boring and doesn't mean anything anymore.

Do people not think letters were not written to protest the extension of an extra week of school? You bet there were letters! There were also conferences held in Toronto with students, and the results of the hundreds of letters and the conferences was the extension of the school year for another week.

The national guardsmen who murdered the four Kent University students naturally were scared because they were green and did not really expect the barrage of rocks they got. I say murdered — people may disagree because the students were armed with stones and other articles. But I feel very sorry for anyone who would kill another person because that person is throwing rocks at him. And if you have to protect yourself by shooting people I feel sorry for these people too. I am not going to say that it was the students' fault because they did not start the war — they were demonstrating against it. If the national guardsmen hadn't lost their heads, four more students would have been living today.

I do not possibly see how you can "fight to maintain peace." Peace is something that you do not obtain by violent methods (this also goes for students) it is something you achieve through love for your fellow man.

I believe in what I say and a lot of other people feel the same way.

Add singing to keep fit

The Oshawa Chapter, Sweet Adelines, salutes National Health Week, 1970.

"Add singing to your physical fitness program," advises Lorraine Henderson, publicity chairman. "Proper breathing is essential to singing and to health.

"Breathing exercises have been used for years to help many suffering from respiratory problems. Clinically, the gasping emphysema patient is converted into a slowly breathing individual who has control of his breathing. Not all patients can be trained to accomplish this, but those who can, benefit.

"The maximum benefit of breathing exercises may not relate to strengthening of muscles but rather to slowing of the respiratory rate, the increased depth of breathing and the positive psychological effects induced by breathing control.

"Proper breathing is essential to singing. Singing is a wonderful hobby and an aid to better health. Join us and sing on Mondays at 8 p.m. in Thornton Community Centre."

May - the month of music

This year May has been the Month of Music in Oshawa. From the Folk Festival to the Symphony and the "Moany-Groany" to the operetta Oshawa has had spread before it a smorgasbord of sound.

Contributing in no small measure to this season of festivals has been the elementary schools, Zone C of the Ontario Board of Education.

In the four concerts a total of 41 groups performed representing 34 schools and between 2,500 and 3,000 participants without any competitive element.

The festivals were directed by the music consultants of Zone C, Wallace Young ATCM Mus.Bach.; Margaret Drynan, Mus.Bach.; and Grace Hastings, who were congratulated by members of the board and superintendents.

Superintendent R. H. Broadbent thanked the consultants and Edward Oscapella for his instrumental programs, the classroom teachers who gave the day-by-day instruction, the back-stage helpers and the hundreds of parents and friends who had attended the concerts.

Trustee H. C. Wilson noted: "Music brings us together. On birthdays, at weddings, in church, around camp fires, we express ourselves in song. It unifies us as a nation in our anthem. Music demands conformity yet allows individuality in playing, listening and composing. Music is an integral part of education."

The choirs sang all kinds of music from folk airs to Broadway hits. Several choirs chose Edelweiss from "Sound of Music", arranged by Margaret Drynan. Harmony Junior Choir sang The Lighthearted Fairy composed by Mrs. Drynan and Ritson Intermediate Choir sang "Including Me" written and

PA'N — YOUR BODY'S CRY FOR HELP

There has never been a generally satisfactory definition of pain or even a good method to measure it. Some rare individuals have an inborn immunity to pain which is called "Congenital Analgesia." Others are so sensitive that they feel pain at the slightest instance. But, pain is your body's personal alarm system and should not be ignored.

Once your physician has pinpointed the condition causing the pain symptom, he can act to give you quick relief. We stock the medicines he prescribes in our prescription laboratory. We have the modern pain killers and medicines that attack the cause of pain symptoms.

Vandals hit spy camp

While Oshawa is still in the process of buying Camp X, the buildings on Camp X property, are being torn down — fixture by fixture.

Since the beginning of this year, extensive damage has been done to the old army barracks on Camp X. Windows have been smashed. Doors have been removed from their hinges. And lighting fixtures, plumbing fixtures, radiators and sinks have disappeared.

"As far as an industrial park is concerned," says Industrial Commissioner, Bob Nicol, "the industrial commission has no use for the buildings. But it is a Council decision as to what will happen to them."

NOT MATURE PEOPLE

"I would think it would be the kids doing most of the destruction, more than it would be mature people. Kids get in there and think it's a wonderful play area.

"I thought that if the Corporation of Oshawa didn't want these buildings, they could be sold as cottages, or workshops. I hate to see these things wantonly destroyed because someone can always find something to do with the buildings.

"The City has already had a number of inquiries from people who want to buy them."

POLICE

What is being done to stop any more damage from being done?

"We have notified the police on several occasions," says Nicol. "And they have increased their surveillance of the camp and I believe have caught people who were removing certain fixtures.

"The police, however, cannot sit on the camp 24 hours a day. This is one reason why during the smelt fishing season and the snowmobile season, people had easy access to the ground of Camp X and extensive damage was done to the buildings.

"The City has made an agreement to purchase Camp X from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation in Ottawa," says Nicol. "At the present time the legal papers are in the process of being prepared with the net result being the City of Oshawa does not at the present time own the camp.

"The Federal government probably wrote these buildings off years ago and does not particularly care what happens to them."

White Paper under fire at Chamber meet

What is the basis of the organized opposition to the Government's White Paper on Taxation?

Oshawa businessmen pondered that question at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon with guest speaker John Bulloch of the Canadian Council for Fair Taxation.

Bulloch put it this way:

"All Canadians recognize a number of very good provisions in the White Paper. The relief provisions are not even under question by any of the members of the Canadian Council for Fair Taxation. The Government's attempt to depict those opposed to its White Paper as either wealthy, selfish, or haters of the poor is dishonest and unworthy of our elected representatives.

"The purpose of our organization is to enlighten the general public as to the true nature of the Government's proposals. We consider the White Paper to be a serious social document that will be only changed if there is a significant public outcry. There are a number of "traders" or "red herrings" that will be dropped in order to give the impression of change; but the hard core White Paper will, we believe, be enacted into legislation."

The "genesis" of the White Paper was the Carter Royal Commission Report on Taxation, Bulloch said.

"The Commission was criticized by almost all of the tax practitioners because of its treatment of "a buck is a buck". This theoretical or neutral approach to taxation ignores the economic realities of Canada. It ignores the fact that such things as weather, risk, freight rates, tariffs, etc. are not neutral in their effect on business. It also ignored the persistent inflation in Canada; and would have treated an inflationary dollar in the same manner as a real dollar. It was obvious that the public outcry had no effect because the government accepted the neutrality aspects of the Carter Royal Commission Report; and then adjusted the rates in the Carter Report in order to use tax reform as the basis for raising revenues.

"We are thus getting a "butchered" Royal Commission Report. This revenue-raising exercise is coming in three stages. The first stage being the recent changes in the estate tax act and the gift tax section of the income tax act plus the changes in taxation for insurance companies and banks. The second stage being the White Paper, and the third stage will be changes in Federal indirect sales taxes.

"The rate adjustments made by the Government are so serious as to seriously impair the operation of the free enterprise system. The double taxes on capital (estate taxes, and capital gains taxes) according to I. M. Asper, will eliminate all private pools of capital in Canada within two generations. The investment of the middle class (farms, businesses and real estate) face confiscation.

"Further restrictions of the private sector will result from a reduced foreign investment in Canada and a reduction of private savings and private investment. We can expect more involvement of the Government in our lives with up to 40 per cent of the Gross National Income being expenditures by all levels of Government.

"Thus the opposition to the White Paper is not based on the Government's attempt to redistribute personal income. It is based on the attempt to use tax reform to raise new revenues, and restructure the social and economic order in this country," Bulloch said.

The beach at Oshawa may not be much of a place to swim, but the sand dunes, here and there, offer the greatest jumping places, according to Greg Rundle, 11.

OGH graduation brings alumnae class re-union

On Friday evening, June 5, 32 young women will graduate from Oshawa General Hospital School of Nursing; four from OGH School of Medical Technology and six students from the School of Radiological Technology.

The graduation exercises will take place at Eastdale Collegiate and the address to the Class of '70 will be given by a graduate, Class of '54, Josephine McDonald Kietz of Whitby.

The Alumnae Association will honor the nursing graduates at a dinner at the Civic Auditorium on Saturday night, June 6. The dinner will be followed by a dance which is open to the public. Tickets at $5 per couple are available at the box office.

The graduation dinner is always an occasion for class re-unions and the presentation of life memberships to 25-year members of the Alumnae Association.

This year 12 members of the Class of '45 will receive life memberships. Mrs. Clarence Bell (Louise Foley) of Bowmanville is convening a luncheon at the Georgian Motel for the class. Coming from a distance for the re-union are Mrs. Robert Sugden (Aurora Boehmer) Montreal, and Mrs. Victor Alp (Corinne Lynne), Timiskaming, Quebec.

Class of '40, a group of 32, is meeting for luncheon at the YWCA and Mrs. Jean (Hunter) Houston will entertain following dinner for those not wishing to dance. On Sunday the class members and families, possibly 68 children, will gather for a picnic at the home of Mrs. Murray Mountjoy (Enid Blackburn) at her Harmony Road North home.

The 15-year group, Class of '55, will take luncheon at the Georgian and a tour of the hospital before dinner. In this group will be Mrs. Frank Pickett (Nancy Mardon) from Spenard, Alaska.

Similar plans are lined up for the Class of '60 who will be entertained by Mrs. Everett DeHart (Sheila Manuel) following dinner. On Sunday, a family picnic will be held at Orono Park.

After the dinner and dance, the Class of '65 will depart for Lake Scugog where they will spend Sunday at Mrs. Larry Anderson's (Carol Evans') family cottage.

Mrs. Murray Mountjoy, president of the Alumnae Association will preside for the dinner. Mrs. Donald Houlden (Margaret Redpath) is the social convener. Mrs. Mildred Gulliver, OGH director of nursing and Miss Gladys Hill, director of nursing education will be guests of honor.

Many Canadians who have felt the iron heel of communism, are deeply concerned at the news that Commissions of the Organization of United Nations (UNESCO and Human Rights Commissions) are planning a world-wide celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Lenin, proclaiming him a "great humanist".

Not least among these concerned citizens are a great number of Oshawa residents of Central European descent.

A committee has been formed under the chairmanship of Nick Bartkiw and a meeting to acquaint the press of the situation was held last week.

Representing their various organizations at this meeting were: Chairman Nick Bartkiw, president Canadian Ukrainian Committee; Zen Warenycia vice-president Canadian Ukrainian Committee; Dr. M. W. Michalkoff, Bulgarian National Front in Oshawa; Boris Leschonak, ByeloRussian Society in Oshawa; Mrs. Luba Turecki, Women's Auxiliary, Canadian-Ukrainian Committee; Dr. Nicholas Ostafichuk, Canadian League for the Liberation of the Ukraine and Mrs. Ostafichuk, Women's Association of the CLLU; Otto Zavesiczky, Canadian-Hungarian Federation; John Ivanco, Canadian Slovak League, Branch 6, Oshawa.

Dr. Ostafichuk said that it was difficult to imagine a greater travesty of the truth than the cynical way in which one of the greatest tyrants of all time was being presented by an authoritative body, to the whole of mankind as its outstanding benefactor.

"Lenin has been dead for 46 years, but the system he created lives on and the iniquities and crime committed by him and in his name by his successors and the state he founded are still being multiplied and repeated.

"It was no one else but the "outstanding humanist", Lenin, who founded the infamous Cheka, later known as GPU, NKVD, MGB and now, KGB, the symbol of murderous ruthlessness and diabolic perfidy."

It was obvious that the men and women present at the meeting were shocked and sick at heart at the very thought that the United Nations would eulogize Lenin, the murderer of millions.

"In permitting this to happen," one said, "they challenge everything that is good and beneficial in this world, disregarding public opinion."

A letter has been drafted to be addressed to the Secretary - General U Thant, protesting the United Nations recognition of Lenin as a great humanist.

Copies of the letter will be available at a special meeting to be held in the Dnipro Hall on Sunday next, May 31, at 1 p.m.

CONSERVATION

Trying to catch land before it goes down the river

Maybe you've asked yourself "what does this mysterious conservation authority conserve?"

Stan White, the resources manager of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority explains that part of the Authority's job is preservation of floodplains and forests, with the purity of the environment a matter of general concern.

Yet, this is only part of its function. Recreation is also a major concern of CLOCA. So is educating the people of the area to respect their environment and to learn how to preserve and improve it.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission was established by the provincial government after the devastation of Hurricane Hazel in 1954. Conservation authorities are established throughout Ontario to involve local municipalities at the citizen level in preserving and protecting our environment, and preventing the kind of devastation wrecked by Hazel.

Conservation authorities, such as CLOCA, often become involved in purchasing valley lands. "The idea is to protect the valleys from encroachment on the floodplain," explains White.

Floodplain levels are measured by the height of water which was reached by Hurricane Hazel. "We have to use Hurricane Hazel as a guide," he says, "because there is always the possibility that a storm of this magnitude could once again come into this area."

Floodplains act as relief valves during a storm. All the storm water flows away from the built-up area into the floodplain and thus great property damage can be avoided.

But it also means that floodplains and valleys should not be seriously altered without full consideration of the potential hazards and without the advice of experts.

CONVINCE PEOPLE

"It's hard to convince people of the possibility of danger in building on a floodplain or filling in valley lands," says White. Filling in a valley to "reclaim" land for construction just creates all kinds of problems, including erosion.

"The main thing is keeping the valley land open from encroachment," he says. "This automatically creates a recreation area."

Recreation, says White, is a very valid aspect of conservation. "It's the conservation of the human resource." But it receives more attention than pure conservation, because it attracts people. The floodplain land purchased for conservation purposes is also excellent for recreational purposes.

To date four specific conservation areas are under improvement. The authority is considering the purchase of city-owned lands in the Oshawa Creek Valley, particularly in the area designated for the upper airport reservoir. CLOCA members are also concerned with the preservation of land along the shore of Lake Ontario. Negotiations are beginning with both Oshawa and Whitby to purchase sections of Camp X along the lakefront.

Recreation facilities developed by the conservation authority are much different from city parks which are usually aimed at activity and recreation. The conservation areas are not as active. They are for picnickers, birdwatchers, fishing and following nature trails.

EDUCATION

Education is growing in importance as part of the Authority's program. "It is quite important to get the young people more and more interested in their environment. There's a general feeling throughout the land that this is necessary," he says.

Conservation spokesmen don't usually go into the classroom themselves, but they do try to interest the teacher in conservation so they can bring this into their teaching. And White and his assistant offer all kinds of help.

Some teachers and classes are taking advantage of the assistance and information available to them. A biology teacher at O'Neill Collegiate has his classes doing a pilot project involving field work. The conservation authority is helping out by supplementing his testing equipment to test the environment.

"We'd like to urge teachers to take a greater interest in environmental problems," says White — who is employed by the province of Ontario, but on loan to the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority.

The authority is also aiming at expansion of the public education program generally. It has a couple of 16 millimeter films which are loaned out to various groups.

Assistance of the pollution-conscious public is a new goal. Recently a new advisory board was appointed called the "environmental quality advisory board." This committee is concerned with the various aspects of pollution — air, water, and soil.

Its first task has been to inform itself fully regarding what the conditions are, what other agencies are involved in pollution control, and what the governing legislation is regarding pollution.

CLEARING HOUSE

"We hope this will act as a local clearing house," says White. Pollution is generally handled by branches of the provincial government, he explains but this is pretty far removed from the immediate problem right in the municipality.

Local people will have more access to the Conservation Authority than to some provincial department in Toronto. The advisory committee can hear the complaints, comments, and reports; pass the information on to the appropriate agency; and relate the replies or solutions back to the local people.

June 13 to 20 is Conservation Week and the Authority is preparing a special program for schools and the general public at the Enniskillen Conservation Area. All area schools are invited to participate in a poster contest about the merits of conservation. And each class is invited to visit the conservation area as a class trip.

The weekend of June 20 and 21, field trips around the Enniskillen Area are being scheduled. Everyone is invited. People from the Lands and Forests Department will be down; there will be a bee keeping display and a fishing derby; Hay rides for the adventurous and lots of yummy food prepared by the ladies of the Enniskillen area. The price is minimal, and they're great cooks.

Conservation schools are continuing where classes of boys exchange a week in the classroom for a week out of doors working. These conservation schools are sponsored by the Conservation Authority and the Board of Education jointly. They are held at the Kiwanis Camp, on Ritson Rd., north of the city limits.

And the next one, and the next one, until there are no trees left? It's that beautiful stretch of Simcoe Street North that has been getting the axe at the hands of Ontario County roads crews. It's another case where the car and its exhaust fumes has won over mother nature's tree.

This year students from Vanier Collegiate undertook an erosion control project and some creek improvement on the Heber Down Conservation Area. "And they had a lot of fun doing it too," says White.

NOT OPEN YET

The Heber Down Conservation Area won't be open to the public for another year because a lot of improvement still remains to be made before it will be suitable for general use. This summer, however, the Authority is opening this area — the old Lyndebrook Park — to the Whitby YMCA and its summer day camp program.

The Heber Down area will be primarily devoted to recreation; whereas the Enniskillen Conservation area, — opening for its third season — which retains more of the natural foliage and conditions.

Although the Long Sault area is also open to the public, very little development has taken place there. It is north of Bowmanville, towards Mosport.

Three years ago, the authority acquired the Little Buckeroo Ranch, just east of the city limits. It's since been renamed Harmony Valley and the authority officials are presently in the process of evaluating the condition of the building there and what kind of development will be undertaken.

This year of austerity, says Manager White, is one for planning, not purchasing or spending a lot of money on development.

The authority also comments on all subdivisions from a conservation point of view, including the grade of banks and the possibility of erosion as well as placing fill in the floodplain and building right on the floodplain. We work in close cooperation with the Central Ontario Joint Planning board and the municipal planning board, the resources manager says, "And with some success."

"Most people don't realize that when they disturb the existing conditions, this may have a particular effect in relation to water," he notes. "Valley land is a rather important form of flood control."

"We try and catch them before they literally go down the river," says White. "We try to prevent mistakes."

Donevan orchestra to Newfoundland

By David Ewles

Yesterday was one date that all members of the Dr. F. J. Donevan Collegiate Orchestra kept open. The orchestra, complete with music, instruments, and baggage left for St. Johns, Newfoundland, to perform at the Arts and Culture Centre of that province.

To Al Reesor, Head of the Donevan Music Department and Music Co-ordinator for Ontario County, such a trip poses no problems. In 1967 the entire orchestra performed at Expo '67 in Montrea, and again in 1968 the orchestra made a successful excursion to Mount Allison University in Sackville, New Brunswick. Reesor hopes such trips serve as a stimulus to other schools to start instrumental programs, and the Donevan orchestra provides "ample proof of the musical ability of Oshawa youth.

Funds to sponsor such trips are raised entirely by orchestra members. Since early spring all of the young Donevan musicians have been hard at work raising the necessary money by chocolate sales, car washes, and a memorable concert at the Eastdale Collegiate Auditorium on April 27.

In competition the Donevan orchestra has had a number of successes at Kiwanis Festivals and has been featured in such events as the Oshawa Folk Festival. Many of the students do not restrict their music talents to the school orchestra. Approximately 12 are members of the Oshawa Symphony, and a number of others are in the Oshawa Youth Orchestra. These same students come from all grades nine to 13 inclusive.

For Reesor the trip to St. Johns has particular significance, for it marks his last concert as conductor of the Donevan orchestra. Next September he will assume duties as Music Director at the University of Prince Edward Island.

Fun in the creek valley behind Oshawa's Rundle Tower. Greg Smith says he comes regularly to exercise.

Congratulations to Mrs. Sebastian Conlin, 54 Arlington Avenue, who is observing her 99th birthday today. Mrs. Conlin was born in Oshawa and has always made it her home. She has three daughters living; six grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

Here's where to fish

No longer is there a ban on sports fishing in certain Ontario waters recently found to be contaminated by mercury.

All fish caught in these designated areas, however, should not be eaten but returned to the water.

But while shore lunches and take-home stringers are out, the angler may still catch and keep that "one for the wall" since trophy fishing is not prohibited.

In the affected areas sports anglers are invited to come and fish for fun and enjoy the outdoors adventure.

While mercury tests continue, the rest of Ontario's quarter-million lakes still enjoy a simon-pure rating, and it's ideal fishing conditions as usual.

As of this moment here are the facts as released by the Department of Tourism:

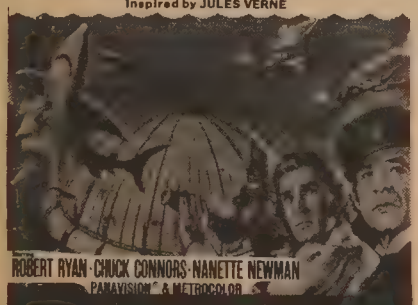
On Lake Erie only pickerel and whitebass fronting Essex and Kent counties carry levels consistently greater than ½ part per million of mercury.

On Lake Huron, only pickerel fronting Lambton county is on the no-eat list.

In other waters, a variety of species have mercury concentrations above the safe level and no species should be eaten at present. These include the Ottawa River downstream from Ottawa; the St. Lawrence River, Lake St. Francis downstream from Cornwall, the Detroit River and St. Clair River.

All of the aforementioned affected areas are of course closed to commercial fishing, but open to all sportsmen who want to come and fish for fun.

Offending sources of the contamination have been pinpointed and the discharge has been stemmed to within government requirements.



Love it and see it by camper

If you want to go where you want to go, and do what you want to do this summer, campers are the answer. Basically a mobile home built on top of a pick-up truck, campers are completely outfitted to ensure every comfort while making almost any area of our big land accessible.

Large and powerful cars with outsized rear view mirrors, and trailer hitches, are out. A camper is one unit. The truck itself is a ¾ ton pick-up, and the house up top is ideal for a family of four. It has two double beds, a propane gas stove, refrigerator, gas heater, large sink, toilet, interior electric lighting and plenty of storage compartments — in effect a home away from home.

But campers cost money, and in this period of tight finances few Canadian families are in a position to spend several thousand dollars on a vehicle they might only use occasionally. The answer? Rent one. "Not only are we providing tourists with an opportunity to enjoy the use of a camper for short periods if they wish, but this year we have organized seven different camper tours of Canada," according to Ross Clark, Director of Sales - Canada, Tilden Rent-A-Car System.

Journey Fantastic of a women's daring and fortitude

Before the steamer arrived at the Red River Settlement, Catherine Schubert had no plans to trek across the Rockies. But rushing down the gangplank came a group of adventurers brimming with the enthusiasm of Toronto newspaper advertisements, clutching tickets which promised a stage coach ride directly to the gold of the Cariboo in British Columbia.

There was no stage coach. But the fever of fortunes to be made seemed vehicle enough to Catherine's husband. Determined that her three small children and the baby yet to come should not be without their father, Catherine persuaded the overlanders to include her and her family in their number. In May, 1862, she began the incredible five-month journey from Winnipeg which would end in her being the first white woman to enter British Columbia — overland.

Journey Fantastic, a fascinating account of a woman's daring and fortitude, has just been published by The Ryerson Press. Written by Vicky Metcalf, the book details how Catherine Schubert, shielding her pregnancy from the others lest she be turned back, floundered through swamps, inched along precarious mountain ledges, forded icy mountain rivers (as many as 14 in a day) and trudged weary miles through boulder strewn ravines all the while concerned that her baby would be born in the wilderness far from help.

The group gradually dwindled. When the Overlanders set out from Winnipeg, the company consisted of 200 men, over 100 animals — oxen, horses and cows — and 97 Red River carts. Some of the men decided to give up the rigorous trek and settle at the communities along the route; some branched off to search for gold in other areas; some were lost in the currents of mountain rivers. The animals were killed when food became scarce. The carts were abandoned as treacherous ground and utter exhaustion took their toll.

Indian guides advised the travellers how to supplement their meagre food stocks with game. After one dinner of roast skunk, the leader of the party, McMicking, wrote in his diary that "the dish would have tempted the palate of Epicurus himself", and "it was unanimously resolved that His Skunkship had been a slandered and much abused individual."

Bottle boost to five cents?

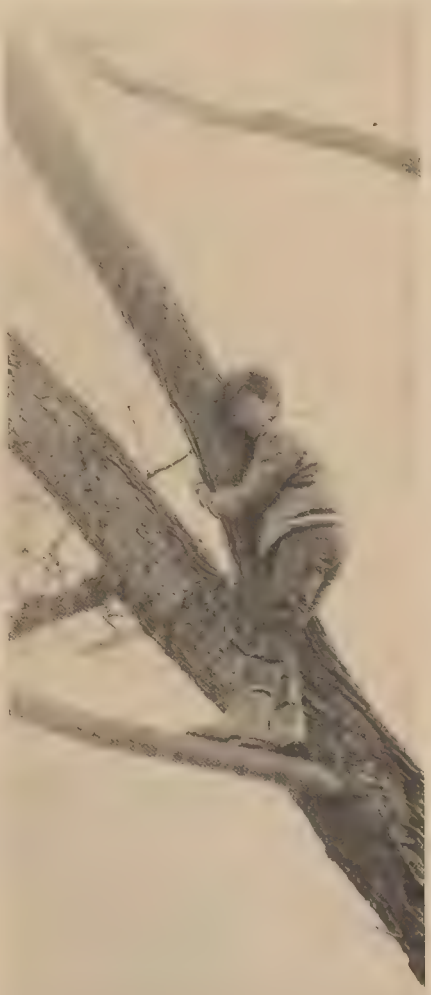
The president of Hambly Beverages in Oshawa says he doesn't think any boost in the deposit on soft drink bottles would increase the return of the bottles.

Bob Hambly says the Coca-Cola Company believes the jump from two to five cents is too high.

In Northern Ontario, Hambly said, the deposit has been three cents for some time and within another month it is expected to be in effect in Oshawa and area.

The beverage company president said in the U.S. the deposit has been five cents, but there it has not brought an increase in the number of returned bottles.

Energy and Resources Minister George Kerr meanwhile, has announced a special meeting in the near future with the seven big soft drink companies to try and persuade the industry to voluntarily raise the deposits to five cents.



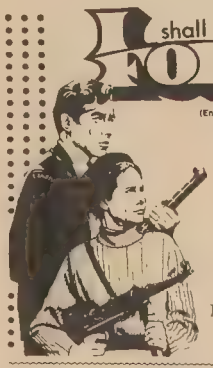
Drug costs beat MD's

The medical health officer of the York-Oshawa Board of Health says the recently announced attempts by government to reduce drug prices are a good move.

Dr. J. O. Slingerland says there is a "fantastic difference" in the cost of drugs and that it depends on where the drug is sold.

He says the smaller drug companies are usually honest and charge reasonable prices. However, the MOH added, the dishonest pharmacist is also the cause of some of the outrageous drug prices.

He said most druggists do charge a reasonable price according to the cost. Still, often, the drugs cost more than the doctor's call, said Dr. Slingerland.



Way up in the Maple tree there's clean air and a world all by itself, says Pat VanderZwaag, 12, of Athol Street.

TEACHER IMPRESSED TOO

Department makes movie of Central course

By Mitzi Cohen

As a teacher, I have been very much impressed with the Grade Thirteen Home Economics course at Oshawa Central Collegiate, given by Mrs. Jean Clements, Head of that department. Fourteen girls and two fellows are benefitting from it. The Department of Education has also been impressed, for it has made a movie of parts of the course.

The course is very sociological. The first part consisted of an examination of the family from early Hebrew, Greek, and Roman times up to the present. Next, the class discussed socialization of the child, from birth to marriage. Among the topics discussed were dating standards of teenagers and adjustments in marriage.

What followed was work on typical situations in the family. Each student chose a particular area, collected a folio on it, and presented it to the class. Situations considered were the unwed mother, the retarded child, the foster child, alcoholism, and the juvenile delinquent.

The students who chose juvenile delinquency as their topic invited Const. Carman White of Oshawa Police to speak. He informed the class about the most common areas of trouble among boys and girls respectively, and how he would handle a typical case. The class was also interested in his display of hand grenades, knives, and guns, that were actually taken from juveniles. For the foster child, the students invited two mothers with foster children and a social worker to the class for a discussion period. For the unwed mother section, the students put on a skit that conveyed the feelings of the unwed mother and the putative father.

As a part of the study of the economics of the Canadian family, the section on Poverty followed. The Department of Education has hired a crew to film parts of this course. The Department is planning to show it to teachers, as an example of an independent study course. Each student has chosen a particular aspect of poverty for a project. The crew has filmed discussions in the classroom and has followed students outside on their projects.

Two students have chosen Government Housing. They have visited deteriorated areas, interviewed families, and talked to housing and health authorities about it.

"I noticed a very cheap type of housing is constructed," said one student. "If the government built better housing for low income families, we wouldn't have slums so quickly."

This pupil reported seeing cracks in the low-rental houses and said that he was told that, in the winter, flooding sometimes occurs in the basement and living room.

"We tried to interview more people," he said, "but they wouldn't answer the doorbells. We saw them peeking from the windows. We were the outside world, the police maybe, and they were afraid."

Another student has chosen as her topic "The Feelings of the Poor" as seen from the words of modern music. She has taped songs relating to poverty, and these tapes were included in her presentation to the class.

Two students visited an Indian reservation, Ohsweken, near Brantford. "You sure could tell we were coming into Indian reservation area, because the roads got so much worse all of a sudden," said one of the girls. "Because they pay no taxes, they have no hydro. It's a very primitive life. They live on the reservation to preserve their identity, but many do leave it to work in Brantford during the day."

The two students spoke with an Indian lawyer, who lives off the reservation. They were interested to note that once an Indian person has gone to university, he moves off the reservation to enjoy

Body found

Provincial Police have recovered the body of a 39-year-old Toronto woman from Lake Scugog, six days after the woman drowned in a boating accident.

Anna Latten of Toronto drowned last Sunday when she fell into the lake while boating with a group of friends.

Dragging operations throughout the past week failed to locate the body of the woman, until it was seen floating near shore early Sunday.

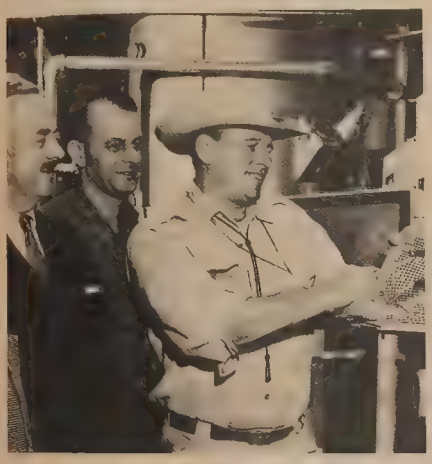
Whitby firm gloves Oshawa

One of Whitby's new industries, Industrial Glove Restorers, has been awarded a sizeable General Motors contract, it was announced by Wes Winters, Development Commissioner.



"We anticipate," said I.G.R.'s President Howard Pel, "up to 400,000 pairs of gloves annually will come from General Motors to be cleaned and repaired." The firm now services companies such as Johns-Mansville, Houdaille, LASCO, Dunlop, The Pedlar People and Crouse-Hinds. Manufacturing plants have experienced savings of up to 80% through use of Industrial Glove Restorers' unique service, according to Pel.

I.G.R. has grown from a small company of three people in 1969 to a firmly established company with additional investments of nearly $50,000 in new specialized industrial cleaning equipment. I.G.R.'s owners take special pride in the fact that theirs is the only cleaning company of its type in Ontario and they have now established a reputation in industrial circles for high quality and superior pickup and delivery methods.

Ted Hewlett, General Manager, says the company is providing cleaner and safer gloves for customers, and at the same time they save money by re-using their old aprons and gloves up to 20 times instead of going to the extra expense of new purchasing. Savings over a year can go as high as 80% on glove expenses.

Hewlett said most cleaners use solvent to dissolve dirt and grease found in dirty gloves. Aside from the fact that the use of solvent contributes to air pollution when used as a cleaner, it stays in the gloves, and if exposed to flame, will burn.

The Whitby firm's process is to clean both cotton and leather gloves using perchlorethylene, a non-pollutant, which evaporates immediately after the cleaning operation and is not at all flammable. It leaves cotton gloves white as opposed to solvent which sometimes leaves a grayish tinge to the fabric.

composed by George and Margaret Drynan.

The Public School String Orchestra, 110 strong, representing grades 4-8, conducted by Edward Oscapella was an inspiration in itself. Young musicians playing half-size violins played pieces by grade 6 composers, Graeme Mudd and Julie Kentish, arranged for orchestra by Edward Oscapella Jr.

The Public School Clarinet Choir produced sweet sounds under Oscapella's direction and a brass band from E. A. Lovell School grades 7 and 8, made a bold debut under Donald Parkes.

Recorders, hand bells, pipes and the electric organ, all had their turn. Choirs sang in three and four-part harmony and Rideway Senior School presented a scene with costume and properties from the operetta, "Tom Sawyer".

Donevan Collegiate Orchestra, the Public School Orchestra, Ajax High School Orchestra, Fairman Public School Whitby and Ritson School Choir assisted by scholarship winners of Ajax Rotary Festival contributed to an outstanding concert presented at Ajax last Thursday.

The Oshawa area office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission this week revised its alternate services for the distribution of unemployment insurance benefits in the event of a national postal strike.

An Oshawa Unemployment Insurance Commission spokesman said benefit recipients in Port Perry will be required to bring their claims forms to the Oshawa office up until this Thursday. After that, the official said, the Port Perry claimants will be required to submit their claims Mondays and Fridays at the Uxbridge Town Hall.

Unemployment Insurance benefit recipients throughout the rest of the area covered by the Oshawa office will still have to bring their claims to the Oshawa office weekdays from 8.30 AM to 4.15 PM.

UIC officials ask that claims be submitted early in the week following the period which the claim covers in order that requests for cheques may be processed.

The same procedure will be followed for persons receiving monthly government annuity cheques.

It's the season to consider rhubarb for dessert

Rhubarb, the first fruit of spring, is now on local markets to tempt lagging appetites. The tender rosy stalks shoot up quickly as the roots absorb warm rain and sunshine.

Although botanically a vegetable, rhubarb is cooked and used as a fruit.

The so-called "field rhubarb" is more acid and will require slightly more sugar than the paler hothouse variety. Rhubarb must be picked to be of best flavor.

The green and red stalks should be firm and brittle and should be used as soon as possible after picking. If they must be stored for a day or two, they may be broken and stored in a plastic bag in the refrigerator.

Homemakers may now start planning ways to utilize it while it is at its tender, colorful best. Rhubarb is delicious when baked or stewed to make a sauce. It combines with other fruits to make jams, conserves or chutneys. It may also be made into a refreshing drink.

Rhubarb is the easiest to freeze of all fruits since it needs only to be washed and cut up before packing. Although called "pie plant", rhubarb makes excellent homey puddings also.

The home economists of the Canada Department of Agriculture have selected three such recipes, one made with a biscuit type base, one using bread cubes and another a crunchy crumb misture.

For the "Rhubarb Pinwheel Pudding," the delicately spiced biscuit dough is rolled out and a rhubarb-sugar combination spread on top. The dough is rolled up like a jelly roll and sliced. The slices are placed on top of more rhubarb and then baked.

The family favorite, "Rhubarb Bread Pudding", is delicately seasoned. "Rhubarb Crunch" has a rhubarb—sour cream filling between layers of a crumb mixture.

Each of these puddings gives off a tantalizing aroma in the kitchen that seems to say "come and get it." They are best served warm with miilk, cream or ice cream

Right to strike vital: ODLC chief

The president of the Oshawa and District Labour Council says the possible legislation to grant collective bargaining, yet denying the right to strike, is denying the rights of the labou

Tom Simmons said the workers would be hamstrung with compulsory arbitration and questioned the usefulness of negotiations if the legislation was brought into effect.

Simmons said the legislation would be far from what the workers want, yet it would be much better than what they presently have. He suggested that the legislation withholding the civil servant's right to strike would be to deny the workers one of their basic rights; the right to withhold their service.

The Labour Council president said the legislation would deny the worker his only effective weapon in negotiations.

Soccer season kicks off

The Oshawa Minor Soccer schedule began Thursday, with the Peewee teams.

The Tykes and Bantams teams began early this week.

Owing to the overwhelming response from the boys in Oshawa (840 signed up) all available playing parks will be used to capacity.

This year the Bantam teams are affiliated to the Ontario Minor Soccer and will be entering for the Ontario Cup. It is also hoped that teams will be entered in the Adidas Ontario Championship.

Inter-District games will be played against Whitby, Ajax, Bay Ridges and Rouge, all at the Kinsman Stadium. Watch for the dates.

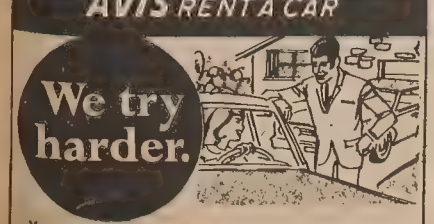
the comforts of the white person.



Another student interviewed different individuals to find out more about the woman on welfare, as the single head of her family. "This woman told me how being on welfare meant a lack of dignity for her — having the social worker coming at any time, without any warning to check up on her. She also complained of the length of time you have to wait to get legal aid."

"Something that did impress me, though," continued the student, "was that some women did take advantage of the budgeting and consumer education courses given by the welfare department."

From talking to some of the students, I was made aware of their great enthusiasm and interest in what they're doing. They are very fortunate, indeed, to have a teacher like Mrs. Clements and to be enrolled in such a course.

FRAUD
on upswing in Oshawa

Watch out!, warns Oshawa Detective Trevor McCagherty. You may be the victim of fraud this year.

Frauds have shown a dramatic increase over the past two years, the Detective told the Soroptomist Club last week and this year, one in four people in the city could be involved in some fraudulent situation.

A little over a year ago, the Oshawa police force noticed that the number of fraud cases had jumped substantially over previous years. At that time, Detective McCagherty was assigned to identification and fraud cases. Six months later, he was joined by Detective Dean Westbrook.

"The increase in the fraud crime rate indicated that criminals had discovered us and had started to come to Oshawa to victimize our merchants and citizens," says McCagherty.

Oshawa's sudden popularity as the subject for people intent on obtaining money and goods by fraudulent means is partially explained by the city's high growth rate and the fact that it is becoming a medium sized city, he says. Fraudulent activities usually stem from outsiders; few local people are involved.

McCagherty and the police department are engaged in a public affairs program to alert the people of Oshawa to the dangers of being the victim of a fraud and how to protect themselves. The detective speaks to many groups explaining how fraud can touch their lives. Last week he outlined the situation to members of the Soroptomist Club.

$40,000 IN YEAR

Fraud, he defined, is the offence of obtaining goods, but not services — by fraudulent means. Last year, Det. McCagherty reports, Oshawa merchants were victimized to the extent of $40,000 — double the previous year.

But merchants aren't the only victims — many are older people who live alone, and even banks.

Counterfeit cheques are just as harmful as counterfeit money, and are often more difficult to identify as false. A cheque offence is committed when a person obtains merchandise by means of a cheque which he knows is worthless because at the time of writing there is not enough money in the account to cover the amount of the cheque. False pretences is the charge when a person obtains something on a non-existent account.

It is not an offence, says Det. McCagherty, when credit is given to pay with a bad cheque. Once credit is given the merchant must seed recourse in the civil courts.

"Fraud professionals are so expert in keeping between the civil and the criminal courts that they can get away with it in many cases," he says.

"There's the saying that a sucker is born every day," McCagherty says, "but the suckers are the honest people. Honest people are the ones who seem to have a lot of trust in their fellow man."

Chimney repairing is a well paying business for some people, he explains. A fellow will call on some old person — the usual victim — and tell him or her that the chimney is going to fall and that he can repair it. A contract is signed for an exhorbitant amount and the man may do a little work on the chimney or the roof — replace a couple of shingles.

One woman signed a contract for several thousand dollars, the detective says, and all she got was four new shingles. If the victim happens to catch up the fraudulent contractor, he just says "tough luck" to the fact that they were sucker enough to pay too much for too little."

RECOURSE

However, there is some recourse in law, McCagherty points out. There have been enough cases to justify a criminal charge of fraud in instances where the price is so far out of reach that there had to be deceit involved. But the people still don't get their money back, he says.

The most commonly accepted type of identification asked for when cashing a cheque is a drivers licence, the detective notes. But it's a fairly simple and inexpensive matter to get a drivers licence under a false name and address. You just go to the department of transport office and purchase a permit under the false name.

A young girl did it last winter before Christmas. She opened a bank account on Dec. 9 and by Jan. 10, she had written $3,000 worth of cheques.

GOT 12 MONTHS

"On Christmas Eve we were walking around until 10 p.m. looking for her," recalls McCagherty.

Everywhere they went they got a good description of the girl — but each one was different. She took deliberate steps to change her appearance — by wigs, make-up, clothes. Eventually, the bulletins the police circulated to all the stores paid off and the girl was found through the diligence of one lady clerk. Although this was the girl's first offence, she was sentenced to 12 months in jail.

More and more the courts are realizing the seriousness of the offence and they're concerned, says Det. McCagherty. Armed robberies used to be considered a far more serious offence because they were violent crimes. Since fraud involves no violence, the sentences used to be very lenient, the policeman says. Usually the first offenders were given suspended sentences and put on probation if they promised to give the money back. "The courts are much stricter now and suspended sentences are rare," he says.

President Lyndon Johnson's Commission on crime projected that one person in every four would either be the victim of or affected by a fraud in 1970, McCagherty notes.

The question then is, how to protect yourself.

"If I had my way," says the detective, "I'd burn all cheque books. But cheques are here to stay."

McCagherty suggests that more than a drivers licence should be required for identification purposes when a cheque is cashed. Even other pieces of identification are not totally foolproof though, he warns. Anyone can buy blank OHSIP, social services, insurance and other cards for a nominal fee of a dollar apiece in Toronto.

Of course, he says, the best identification would be a card with the person's photograph on it. "You can't forge a photograph."

This year a forgery ring is operating in the province. McCagherty warns citizens to be very wary of cashing any company cheques. He recommends that the bank the cheque is drawn on should be contacted to verify the money is there. If the person won't wait until the validity of the cheque is verified, he says, "You're better off anyway."

BAD POLICE CHEQUES

Whole cheques are being forged now, the officer says, not just signatures. In fact, he notes, Oshawa stores cashed three Metropolitan Toronto Police department pay cheques and then found out they were counterfeit. "Counterfeit cheques are the same as money."

McCagherty admits that in some fraud cases, it is difficult for the individual to protect himself. "But you're not at their mercy entirely. We're there," he says. One of the most important facilities in protecting people against forgers is the Centre of Forensic Sciences in Toronto — the crime lab. The centre has two men trained as handwriting experts who have catalogued all records of bad cheques and analysed the handwriting and techniques used to facilitate identification of any new cheque which is forwarded to laboratory.

"If you're taken," says McCagherty, "you're probably not his first victim."

The forensic science experts examine the bad cheque and the handwriting and often come up with a list of suspects. If they have no results, they send the information on to the RCMP which has a nation-wide filing system.

Even certified cheques are susceptible. It only takes 15 cents to buy a rubber stamp of the word "certified". But even this kind of cheque can be traced to the forger.

Police forces across Ontario work together in this area and often a forger is picked up in one city after leaving a trail of forgeries behind him in other municipalities.

NEED YOUR HELP

"This is a problem we can't cure without the help of the community," says McCagherty. If the community won't tell us when they've been defrauded, or won't help when we're looking for someone, he says, we're finished.

"If you refuse to help you're foolish," the detective told the Soroptomists and the community. "Without your help, we can't attack the problem."

One of the lowest types of fraud is the bank inspector fraud, says McCagherty. Old people who live alone are most often the victims of this type of fraud when a caller poses as some bank official and asks the old person to help with a problem. The caller asks the victim to remove an amount of money from the bank — say $2,000

His explanation is that he doesn't trust the teller or that one of the tellers is passing out counterfeit money. Often they specify which teller to go to and request that the victim not tell anyone about it.

From the moment the victim is contacted, she's watched. In fact, sometimes the caller doesn't hang up the phone so she can't phone out. Some go to the trouble to tape record a dial tone so that she won't be suspicious when she picks up the phone. If the victim does decide to contact the police to verify the story, the bank inspector artist merely turns off the dial tone and answers "Police Department." He reassures the victim that the plan is legitimate and so she goes to withdraw the money with a clear conscience. After that the victim returns home and the bank inspector comes to pick up the money "to return it to the bank."

These victimized people are reluctant to report the loss to the police department, McCagherty says. "They're too proud, too embarrassed and too hurt."

Often they have children who are continually asking them to join their families and stop living alone. This kind of thing would simply prove to the children that their parents are incapable of looking after themselves.

McCagherty warns, too, of the danger of simply tossing away incorrect deposit and withdrawal slips at a bank. A "gleaner", he says, can simply come in and collect the names for use in future forgeries. The best policy is to tear the slips up.

EVERYONE LOSES

"The thing with counterfeit money," the detective says, "is that everybody loses. The recipient is obliged to turn it in and he's never going to get anything for it.

"The effect of counterfeit money on the economy is fantastic," he says, "because it affects the whole economy of the community." Merchants have to charge more for goods through losses resulting from counterfeit money. Higher prices mean higher wages, and so on.

Passing of both counterfeit cheques and counterfeit money is well organized all across southern Ontario, Det. McCagherty says. This is something that everyone has to be aware of and watch out for.

Pepin evasive on Auto Pact: MP

Ed Broadbent, MP, Oshawa-Whitby has charged that statements in the Commons by federal industry, trade, and commerce minister Jean-Luc Pepin were evasive. Pepin said last week he could not guarantee the government would not abandon a Canadian content safeguard in the Canada-United States Auto Trade Pact.

The minister added, however he would not drop the safeguard unless he is able to gain a commitment from the United States that would be advantageous to Canada.

Broadbent, in an interview said Pepin was evasive on both questions and strongly suggested that the Government of Canada is going to back down.

The Oshawa-Whitby MP said he intends to pursue the matter as vigourously as he can because he feels it would be "very unfortunate for Canada" if the protective guarantees are removed from the Auto Pact.

Broadbent said it could mean decisions made outside the country would favor employment in the United States at the expense of employment in Canada. Broadbent charged it is particularly important that the Government of Canada take a strong stand on this issue, even though he doubts it will.

Meanwhile, Trade Minister Pepin has written to Mayor Bruce Mackey saying the decisions by certain companies to close their Oshawa plants were made before the signing of the Canada-United States Auto Trade Pact. For this reason, said Pepin, any drop in employment resulting from those decisions cannot be attributed to the Auto Pact. The federal cabinet minister added that a further factor contributing to unemployment is the downturn in car sales which results from the current economic situation. However, Pepin said the market situation is not expected to last long and quoted figures predicting a doubling of the Canadian auto market by 1975.

No more wheelies?

Kids, you'd better change your bicycle driving habits, or else!

That's a warning from the Oshawa Safety Council.

The Council's May meeting decided that in Oshawa "apparently the kid-glove enforcement of bicycle laws will not do anything to improve the problem."

Chairman Joe Reid said "the primary responsibility rests with parents." He added that "in Oshawa we are going to have safe bicycles ridden by safety-trained children."

Said Reid: "The others, and their parents, are going to find themselves in court."

The Safety Council's May meeting also reviewed the annual School Safety Patrollers Jamboree held at the Civic

From all angles, Oshawa's new twin-pad arena looks good. There's going to be lots of extra ice for Oshawa's eager skaters — big and little. And the nice thing about it is — the ice won't vanish in the summertime. This huge new building now under construction, will be insulated to accommodate ice all year round. Here are views of the arena's exterior, from the front and side, and the interior of a skating rink and change room.

Ford clinic held in Chevytown

Ford of Canada's Performance Clinic, staffed by two leading personalities in Canadian motorsport, will appear in Oshawa this week at MacDonald Ford.

John Philipps, manager of Ford of Canada's Special Performance Programs, and professional driver Mike Woods of Mississauga, Ont., conducted the clinic using a tractor-trailer and four specially-modified vehicles.

The clinic which travels coast to coast has a twofold purpose:

To stress Ford of Canada's concern for safe driving, law enforcement and correct vehicle care and maintenance.

To cover all areas of performance, including vehicle preparation, option choice, handling capabilities and competitive racing guidelines.

Robert F. McNulty, Ford of Canada's vice president - marketing and planning, said the clinic was created to meet the youth-oriented growth of interest in automobile performance activities and to demonstrate Ford of C Canada's interest in safety on the highways.

"Half the population of Canada is under 25 and that fact is responsible for the tremendous growth in the last few years of attendance at drag, stock and sports car events in this country," McNulty said. "The young people want performance cars and they want to know as much as they can about them.

"At the same time, we want to do everything we can as a company to encourage the proper use of cars on the street. The Performance Clinic will do a lot to underline the necessity of restricting racing activities to the proper strip or circuit.

"The clinic staffers expect to spend a great deal of time talking with representatives of law enforcement and safety agencies, providing them with any guidance they can at the local level."

The four cars making up the clinic includes an SS/IA Mustang, H/S Cougar, Pro/S Mustang and G/SA Cyclone. All have been extensively modified for use only in sanctioned competition.

McNulty said one of the purposes of the cars was to show the degree of preparation necessary before production automobiles can qualify under National standards.

Taylor on increases for labor

President Abe Taylor of UAW Local 222 says any wage increase sought by labor is caused by the "price gouging of business and industry."

The UAW president was replying to a statement earlier this week by the president of Electrohome Corporation who said labor is the only significant segment of industry which has not agreed voluntarily to curb its demands.

Taylor says industry always attempts to win the public to its side when negotiations are starting. He says the statement is one in a line of many that attempt to turn the public against labor.

The UAW president cited the recent two price increases announced by the International Nickel Company as having supposed to have been based on wage increases.

Oshawa Vikings in weekend rugger action at Lakeview Park.

Aquatic Club scores over St.Catharines

The Oshawa Aquatic Club Bronze team visited the St. Catherines Aquatic Club on the weekend and scored a 225-130 points victory over the host team.

While the girls upheld their end of the competition, it was the boys who supplied the power for the Oshawa Club.

John Stafford was first in the eight-and-under freestyle while Chris Brooks took the backstroke.

Mike Fannin, for the second meet in a row, was a triple winner in the 10-and-under division winning the backstroke, butterfly and breast strokes.

Bob Weindorfer won the freestyle.

Peter Sholz was the winner in the 11-and-12 year backstroke with Charles Halam-Andres taking three seconds in this division.

Ian Hill was another triple winner as he finished out front in the freestyle, breast stroke and butterfly races for 13-and-14 years.

Al Lane was first in the backstroke.

The "open" division saw four different Oshawa swimmers win gold

THIS SPORTING LIFE

By Al Mack

Muscles are aching everywhere over the selection of Montreal as the site of the 1976 Summer Olympics. Jaw muscles, that is.

You could count on a vocal uproar from Los Angeles and Moscow, the number three and number two also-rans. But both localities have an international reputation for big-mouthing. It's disappointing, though, to listen to the bellyaching from all parts of Canada.

The beefs fall into two categories: Those from poor losers, in which those who backed Vancouver-Garibaldi for the '76 Winter Games join Angelenos and Muscovites; and those who fear the cost of the Olympics to this Canadian nation.

As far as the westerners and pseudo-westerners who claim the Vancouver-Garibaldi bid was jobbed by Montreal's grab for the big apple are concerned, they seem to forget that the Winter Games are virtually washed up, anyway. Loveable Avery Brundage has demanded the elimination of alpine skiing and ice hockey from the Winter Olympics because of the alleged "hypocrisy" rampant in those two sports — in other words, the money paid to top "amateur" performers. With a reduced skiing program and no hockey, just how impressive would Winter Games be, especially in a country like Canada?

I say we're damned lucky not to be saddled with a fifth-rate attraction, no matter how much British Columbians seem to care for it . . . they've still got Wacky Bennett to show the world.

The cost factor raises some legitimate doubts. We would be a stupid or naive people not to realize that Montreal and the Province of Quebec won't be able to finance the Games alone, no matter what supersalesman Jean Drapeau says. The big bulk of the expense will certainly fall on the Canadian people as a whole.

But let's look at it this way:

The Olympics are a supranational venture, generally non-violent — in other words, normally peaceful. Canada has not hesitated in the past to jump into international affairs in efforts, unsuccessful or otherwise, to keep the peace. Olympic participation and especially Olympic hosting would appear to be in our modern national tradiation, and therefore is a national obligation.

The federal government will always find a way to waste money — just look at the annual reports of Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson for precedent. And if money is to be spent on sport, I as a taxpayer would rather see it spent on the Olympic Games, since it could have a spin-off value in developing sports activities for the nation's youth which would last long after the summer of 1976, rather than subsidize the skiing and scuba-diving vacations of an aging playboy, to his benefit, but to the benefit of no one else.

In short, money spent on the Olympics would not, like much other spent by the government, be wasted.

Yet another area of complaint is that voiced by some Canadians, that Montreal has pre-empted Toronto's old nickname of Hogtown: That it's hogging everything — first Expo 67, now the Olympics.

But look at it this way: When Montreal wants something, it goes after it. We might be a lot better off as a nation if the rest of our municipalities and provinces put some effort into achievement, rather than sitting on their butts and bawling "foul ball".

Toronto Maple Leaf Vice-President Harold Ballard was right, for instance, when he said Toronto was sleeping while Montreal was acting. When the pitches were being made to represent Canada's bid for the 1976 Summer Olympics, Montreal went into action with a professional approach, a slick warmup for the real contest which laid the groundwork for success in Amsterdam. Toronto, which grabbed the controls for its pitch away from Alan Austin Lamport (the one man who might have given Toronto a chance), gave the responsibility of approaching the Canadian Olympic Association to a group of men whose sporting interests lie closer to croquet. Example: To try and get a major sports spectacle, Toronto's arty presentation emphasized Toronto's cultural life! Now, many people interested in sport are interested in culture, but if you want to sell a yacht to a customer, you don't show him a racing car.

We all can learn from Montreal.

Who needs a flail? Everyone !

By EJGIL JOHANSEN

With the words: "Sold to the man in the red checkered coat!" still ringing in my ears, I left the auction sale and manoeuvred my car through the newly-ploughed field of the farm where the sale had taken place.

As I rode along the county road my thoughts returned to the auction. "Why," I mused, "had I gone there in the first place?" I had been quite comfortable at home. There was an ale in the fridge, a bowl of chips on the table and a great football game in progress. I never had it so good.

Then why the sale? Why did I leave a warm home to go out and face the elements of an abnormally cold afternoon? Then I remembered. There was that ad in the local paper: "Auction Sale — 1: 30 p.m. R.R. 1, Tyrone, Ont." That was it. That is why I was going back home now with a full car and an empty wallet.

"Oh well," I thought, trying to justify my actions, "it was all worth it." For hadn't I, in fact through clever manipulations, purchased some good and worthwhile items?"

What about the old love seat (circa 1850?) Sure the upholstery was worn but someone at the sale informed me about a shop where I could have it reupholstered for under $100. So that wasn't bad considering I got it for a fairly good price.

And what with a little bit of elbow grease and paint remover I could strip off that brown paint and make it look like 'old' again. Anyway, it would be a good winter's project and I could sacrifice those hockey games on tv.

I was feeling better already and I became more elated when I looked at the article on the seat beside me. It was an eight-day clock (maker unknown). Boy, just think of it. An eight-day clock.

Someone in the crowd told me it was a terrific buy and he also knew of a good jeweller where I could have it repaired at a nominal fee. As for the key that was missing, he suggested a key maker in Toronto. All I had to do on the clock was refinish the wood. The face was perfect.

Now my thoughts were of home and the reception I would receive there. My wife would be surprised at all the 'good' bargains I had made. She would certainly love that ornate flower vase that I bought and with the proper floral arrangement the crack in it would hardly be noticeable.

She would agree with me that the car could be parked in the driveway for a length of time while I stored the things in the garage, until I could find a place for them in the house.

Even the kids would be thrilled with the old radio I bought. We would certainly be able to repair it once we found out where to buy tubes for the 1925 set.

Just as I was finishing congratulating myself, something from the back seat hit me in the neck. I stopped the car quickly to check the object and there it was, a flail.

I was prompted into buying this thing when an overly-eager woman beside me, yelled: "Oh look! They're putting up the flail."

I didn't know whether to salute or stand at attention. I finally came to my senses and saw it in the auctioneer's hand. After nodding my approval, I took a closer look at it.

There was not much to it. Just one wooden rod united to another by some type of hinge. But I had never owned one so I bought it.

As of now I cannot think of one single thing to do with it other than to use it as it was intended.

The dictionary describes it best: Flail-hand threshing implement with which grain is beaten out. In other words, 'a flail' is used to separate the wheat from the chaff.

And sometimes that isn't too bad an idea. Who needs a flail; Everyone.

Johansen's story comes from Durham College where he is taking the journalism extension program.

Ontario Society of Artists at McLaughlin Gallery

The Ontario Society of Artists 98th annual open exhibition of painting and sculpture can be seen at the Robert McLaughlin Gallery today and tomorrow.

"The OSA has proved its importance," says Gerald Sevier, president OSA, "in weathering the controversies and censures extended the trail-blazing Group of Seven by an unaware public in the twenties, and has lived to the threshold of its centennial to witness the Group's elevation to a competitive collectors' field of reality.

"The OSA was instrumental in creating the newly chartered organization, Patrons of Canada Art. It became a member of the Canadian Conference of the Arts, contributing to its seminar in Art Education.

"It advanced the federation of art societies, Professional Artists of Canada, and worked with other organizations it helped to found such as The Art Institute of Ontario and the Ontario Association for Films on Art.

"The Ontario Society of Artists is deeply honored to display our 98th annual open exhibition in the Robert McLaughlin Gallery."

Purchase awards by the president's committee of the Robert McLaughlin Gallery amounted to $1,000.

Some of the works which can be seen in this show include, Ophra Benazon's, Trip to Mars — an acrylic selling for $500; Adrian Dingle's, South-Paw On the North Lot — an acrylic selling for $1,700; Sally Wildman's, The Face — an acrylic ink and pencil already sold for $300; Rita Letendre's, Sun Mist — an acrylic already sold for $900; and James R. Lumbers', The Indian Guide — a tempera not for sale.

Industrial democracy humanistic: Broadbent

Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent says the decision by the Canadian Labour Congress, at its annual convention in Edmonton, to accept the concept of industrial democracy gets the labor movement going in a humanistic direction.

The CLC resolution noted a division of function between management and labour, but it endorsed the extension of collective bargaining to take in all matters that affect the life of the workers.

Broadbent said these matters would include technological change, production plans, future development policies, plant closings, and many other items. The CLC resolution also favored the enactment of the freedom report which would give unions the right to negotiate on technological and operational changes during the life of a collective agreement and to veto such changes if no mutual agreement can be reached.

The girls' section received their wins from Terry Jacobs in the eight-and-under freestyle and Margo Mountjoy in the breast stroke.

Susan Okin won the 10-and-under breast stroke with Pauline Saunders winning the backstroke.

Barbara Olin kept pace with her sister by winning the 11-and-12 year breast stroke. Mary McDonnell won the backstroke and Jane Mamelka took the butterfly.

Heather MacKenzie was the only double winner among the girls as she won both the breast stroke and backstroke events for 13-and-14 years.

The butterfly was won by Emily Lawson.

Dianne Mountjoy won the "open" breast stroke event.

Bronze team coach Frank Peseski said he was pleased with the meet results and said he prepared his club for this competition with tougher work-outs in the last few weeks.

Probing the depths

By Francine Fortier

Just off shore Oshawa, on Lake Ontario, extensive studies are underway as part of a limnological survey of the Great Lakes.

Limnology is a study of fresh water, and this particular operation originates from the Canada Centre for Inland Waters, in Burlington.

The Centre was built by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the program, says the Centre's Public Relations Officer, A. R. Kirby, "is designed to bring about better knowledge of the air-

A place where people can do their thing

Downtown Oshawa should be the cultural centre of the town, says William Paynter, the city's urban renewal director.

"It should be the selective type of area where stores serve the individual rather than the conglomerate, a place where people can do their individual thing.

Today the city faces the problem of redeveloping the worn out heart of the city, reviving and refurbishing it, and increasing its value. Not only must the core area be given a facelift, it also needs to acquire a new reason for living.

Paynter predicts that regional offices and institutional functions will be attracted to the downtown core. Already two private developers have firm proposals for high-rise office buildings. And there's no reason why high density apartments shouldn't get going soon in the northern part of the core area, he says

The city began to consider urban redevelopment in 1967 and hired Murray V. Jones and Associates of Toronto to prepare an urban renewal study and scheme for the centre of the city. Approximately a year ago Jones brought in his final draft. Jones proposed that the major traffic arteries — King and Simcoe Streets — be converted into pedestrian malls and the traffic rerouted around the core area.

Jones theorized that the only way to preserve the downtown as a viable economic unit was to consoli-

Name, address and telephone

THIS WEEK.

We've got a name.

22 Simcoe Street South, and that's above Horwich Jewellers.

We've got an address.

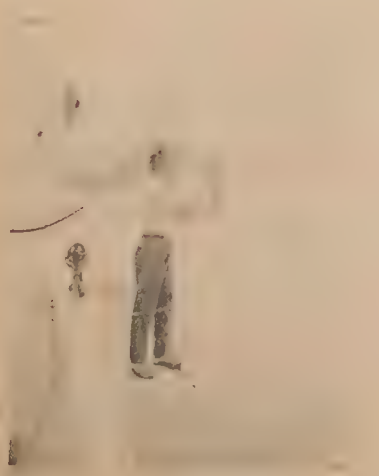
We have a phone number too.

When I write down these facts, it's Monday evening. A week ago at this time we didn't even have a name; let alone an address and a telephone number.

Last week at this time I sat in a corner of my livingroom; typewriter on the floor, ashtray nearby, coffee even nearer, papers stacked two feet high all over the place, and all I did was type like a maniac, with a couple of salesmen trying to find their way through the pile of debris around me.

Now I'm sitting in a corner of my livingroom, but the typewriter is on a table, the stacks of paper have gone down about one foot each, I've managed to cut down on the smoking and my coffee comes with cream and sugar. And yes, the kids are talking to me again, and even my mother-of-six-private-secretary-girl-friday-circulation-clerk-typist gives me the odd smile.



We're in business.

THIS WEEK's first week was a hectic one, and this week was nearly as hectic. And with a little cooperation from everybody next week's THIS WEEK will probably be just as hectic.

But all those newstips and classifieds and messages for the salesmen and the billing department will go through 576-6450. (And go ahead, everyone, try our Phyl Millar. Her classifieds will sell all that stuff you have stored away in the attic and the basement. Ask an Oshawa realtor. He knows. He gets a lot of business from those picture ads in our real shore-lake environment."

LIMNOS

Nestling in Oshawa's harbor this week was the ship Limnos which was built three years ago specifically for the limnological program.

Limnos is 147 feet long, 33 feet wide, weighs 650 dead weight tons, and carries a crew of 17 ship's crew and 10 scientists and technicians. The ship is specially equipped with a laboratory for the scientists and all electronic navigation devices.

Operations officer, Douglas Brooks, who co-ordinates between the scientists and the movements of the Limnos, says, "We're studying so many facets of the limnology surveys that it is difficult to name them all."

It isn't just one group of scientists that carries out the surveys on the lakes. Different teams of scientists are involved in various aspects of the program. One team is taken out on the lakes from the Centre, for its studies and then it is returned and then another team is taken out, and so on.

FIELDS

Some of the fields of study, include chemical limnology, which is the studying of the chemistry of fresh water; meteorology, which is the studying of weather on the lakes; biology, which is the examination of the living creatures taken out of the water; seismic surveys which is the exploration of a lake bottom by sound explosions and physical limnology, in which the lake currents and their directions are studied.

With regard to the latter aspect, current meter moorings were set out about 1½ miles off Raby Head, a point between Oshawa and Bowmanville, on May 15, 1970.

These moorings are currently being brought in and the information will be turned over to the Data Processing Centre in Burlington. Once the moorings are all brought in, the Limnos departs from Oshawa. It will return again for further studies at an unspecified date.

DYE BARGES

Also set up along the Lake Ontario shore are 20 shore stations for dye barges. These stations stretch 10 miles to the east and 10 miles to the west of Oshawa.

The dye barge is the katamaran type, which has two pontoons which are connected together. It has a dye tank and from this extends a plastic hose. This hose goes down to a diffuser bar with 20 holes in it. This bar, or pipe, rests horizontally about 30 feet above the bottom of the lake.

Dye is pumped through the pipe and is diffused into the water at that level.

The purpose of the dye operation is to discover the diffusion of the polluted water in the Oshawa area — how far it goes out, in what directions, and how fast it disappears.

The shore stations have bottles placed at a depth of approximately six feet which collect lake water over a 24 hour period. The bottles are checked every day by scientists who go out to them on a small boat called the Boston Whaler.

These scientists take the water out of the bottles and analyze it to find out in which direction the dye went in the water.

This is the dye barges' first year in operation and the stations will remain until the end of the experiment in October. The experiment works in three stages, each five weeks long. The first stage is being carried out now, the second is in July and the final is in September.

OTHER STUDIES

Other studies being conducted on the lakes include those of the temperature structure beneath the water. This is being tested with remote sensoring devices from high flying aircraft such as CF 100's. Further studies will take place in July and September in co-operation with the oceanography and meteorological branch of the Department of Transport.

Operations Officer, Douglas Brooks, with continuous recording equipment. This equipment records, non-stop, solar radiation, water and air temperatures, and humidity.

Memo to council: cool it !

So you can't decide how the planning and development and what-have-you department should be merged?

We can see such an arrangement would be fraught with pitfalls — to say nothing as to when who should do what and to whom.

It seems to us the city fathers should emulate Kitchener/Waterloo, who have achieved immense success in attracting not just industrial growth, but highly desirable (quality wise) growth to boot. This is no mean trick, when every other municipality in the nation is competing for new industry.

When the competition is keenest, it is only natural that civic officials, charged with the responsibility of promoting industrial growth, would be tempted to lower their standards — perhaps arrange for zoning by-law exemptions in an attempt to attract a particular industry.

Let's face it, with the current economic situation and the sizeable number of unemployed in the area, just about any industry would be welcome if it would create new job vacancies and tax assessment. But would it?

We submit that, as of the present, Oshawa is a good place in which to live. However, what if the present policy is carried to its logical conclusion? We would end up with pockets of industrial development throughout the city, and probably, at best, really outstanding new industrial slums. If you don't believe us, go and look at some of the industrial estates assembled in Metro, and you will understand our concern.

In fact, if you wish to see one in its formative stages, take a walk (don't drive — you would not be able to take it all in) along Hamburgher Alley. Considering this is the main thoroughfare across the city, we would have thought the planning and development departments could have striven a little harder to achieve a result more nearly culminating in excellence in this corridor.

So here are some suggestions:

One approach is to emulate the effective Kitchener/Waterloo machine. Their industrial commission has been incorporated and functions as a separate autonomous corporation on behalf of the municipality.

"This", we can hear council retort, "would remove the industrial commission beyond the jurisdiction of council". Sure it would, but is that necessarily bad? Whoever council appoints to the commission would still be answerable to council. If council feels it couldn't trust its appointees, then let it appoint someone it can trust.

What are the advantages of incorporating the industrial commission? Well, they are manifold, but it would be imprudent of us to list all the advantages at this time. We'll mention a few to whet your interest. As things presently stand, the director of industrial development is very definitely under the gun to produce! His ability is, to a large degree, measured by the new dollar assessment value he brings to the city — i.e. quantity not quality is the yardstick of his personal effectiveness. This policy is certain to achieve results we will all regret a few years from now. Far better, in our opinion, that a positive policy (after you have incorporated the industrial commission) be issued to the director to in all instances strive for excellence when attracting development to the city, and above all to take his time and make haste slowly.

Camp X and the Gifford property present a golden opportunity to be sub-divided to really high performance standards. If the standards are set high enough, and enforced, with no exceptions granted by a future "tax hungry" council, then we are certain the prestige industries who are keenly aware of the importance of a good work environment, will beat a path to industrial commissions Nicols' door.

The industrial commissioner is involved from time to time in land assembly negotiations. It goes without saying that it would not be in the public interest to make public these negotiations. Speculators would be afforded the opportunity to make a lot of money at the taxpayers' expense. Such negotiation needs darkness to germinate and grow into something worthwhile. and in our opinion, this is not entirely possible under the present arrangement.

Finally, do we hear a cry "It's all very well you advocating from the sidelines for Nicol to be allowed to take his time, but just you remember we've run up a debt the size of the Rundle Tower to purchase Camp X and the Gifford Farm for industrial development, and we jolly well owe it to the taxpayers and all the people who phone Margaret, to retire the debt smartly, and we can only achieve that if Bob sells off these lands."

To which we reply "spheres".

The fact is, industrial land close to services in the city, is a diminishing commodity, and accordingly is a gilt edged security for the city (what's wrong with the taxpayer getting a break?).

That the city holds land available for industrial development, which it is willing to sell at a fair market value, has a decidedly discouraging effect on speculative land assembly in the area, and tends to keep land prices stable.

The city is committed, along with other municipalities, in the industrial development poker game, and it will only sweep the pot if it is prepared to bide its time and pick up only those cards that will complement its present stature. This course takes plenty of "cool" and in the process separates the men from the boys. The choice is clear — we can either play our hand with intelligence whereupon the city will remain a good place in which to live, or we can blow the whole opportunity for a fast buck.

End of memo.

Memo to Des : rent one !

Well, Des, it seems you and yours in Whitby have growing pains and the natives are growing restless at the price tag for the cure.

We presume that in your new building you will set aside a very goodly square footage for a Council Chamber. But is it really absolutely imperative that we build another scarcely utilised edifice?

We can appreciate that it is unfair to expect Chief Pilkington and his lads to carry on where they are, as they must already be suffering acute claustrophobia, but why not sugar the pill for the taxpayer and cut out the Council Chamber?

Do we hear you mutter under your breath "another dumb idea"? (would you believe this week's dumb idea?) "Where's council going to meet" you ask. Well, how about someone else's city hall? How about that big barn of a place in downtown Oshawa? Did you know, they have a really jazzy Council Chamber there with very sharp broadloom and comfortable seats? And guess what? They only use it one night a week for about four to five hours and nearly all the rest of the time, it sits vacant — it's not really what you would call an economic utilization of a facility, but it's probably no worse than the utilization of the same sort of structure in most other cities across the country.

"Just as it should be," you might say, "any town with civic pride just HAS to have a Council Chamber; it's impossible to operate without one. Think of the dignity of council — have you no concept of pride?"

"Pride," you say. Now, there's a virtue! Or could it be a liability in this instance? In the Orient they call it face — mainly in the context of losing it or gaining it. It just might be, Des, that a lot of Whitby voters may be wondering if the $900,000 splurge in masonry you and your council are contemplating, is 50 per cent necessity and 50 per cent face.

The idea of Whitby Council moving out of the present Council Chambers and using Oshawa, would afford Whitby's municipal employees some considerable additional square footage immediately, and would sharply reduce the capital cost of your building if you used the Oshawa facilities permanently — or at least until regional government makes the whole ball of wax obsolete anyway.

"Just how," you retort, "are the townsfolk of Whitby expected to get to Oshawa City Hall to attend a council meeting?"

How about chartering a bus on the evenings council meets, to carry aldermen, civic officials, and those of the public who do not have their own transport, from Whitby to the meeting in Oshawa? You could charter a lot of buses Des, with all you would save from omitting provision for a Council Chamber in your new building.

Besides Des, here's another thought — a public gallery in the Council Chamber will soon become obsolete. Cable T.V. companies will be so starved for Canadian talent on their local programs that live performances of council meetings will look mighty attractive (mainly because they think they can get them for free).

We'll give you a tip there Des, if you ever get one of those T.V. outfits wanting to televise the Des Newman Show, live, for free, you can make them pay by insisting on "heat fatigue money" for you and your aldermen. About $15 per councillor per show would be fair, considering the quality of the script.

Will the City of Oshawa let you use their gorgeous new Council Chamber? We don't know, but we bet that if you offered them a realistic rental and didn't burn holes in their broadloom, or leave really obscene notes in the aldermen's desks, they would probably secretly admire your thrift and let you use the facilities. You would also earn the undying gratitude of the Whitby taxpayers.

Look it Des, if you, for example, saved $300,000 on the capital cost of the building by omitting a Council Chamber, you'll save about $30,000 per year in interest charges alone.

If there is one thing the citizens of the proposed Oshawa centred region do not need, it is another Council Chamber. Just stop and count the number we have already that were constructed in the last few years — there's one in Ajax, one in Pickering, your present one in Whitby, the old one in Oshawa, the new one in Oshawa, the Ontario County one and heaven knows how many more in the eastern sector of the proposed region. If you really feel you can't get by without one Des, for goodness sake hold out for a quantity discount, because whoever is in the civic administration building business in these parts has already made a bundle in the past at the expense of the taxpayers.

P.S. to Mayor Bruce Mackey

Oh, Bruce, the City could use the extra cash.

Being an editor of a small weekly newspaper is really a lot of fun. Some of my colleagues on the "big papers" tell me on my semi-annual visits to the Toronto or Hamilton press clubs they'll head out for "one of those weeklies" when they're good and ready to retire. They're going to get in some golf every day, and some fishing, and some hunting and some snowmobiling and in between all these various pleasures they'll write the week's editorial. I usually sit there and nod and I try to make them envious. I tell them I've had it with the hustle and bustle of the big-big-city and that in gold ole Oshawa the pace is so much slower and life so much more refined.

And then one of these guys has to show up on a Tuesday, and my whole story and his dreams of editing one of those dear little weeklies goes to smithereens.

I had one of those visitors last Monday when the news really hit the fan, so to speak, as the Chronicler would put it, and before this colleague knew what hit him he was hammering out things on my typewriter. A big thank you to John. You didn't make it all possible, but it would have been harder without you . . . .

Anyway, these stories about the good ole weekly newspaper editor do have some foundation. I've known several, though I've never had the pleasure of working for a good ole weekly newspaper editor except Brouwer (and at times he drives me mad.)

One of the weekly industry's finest was a man named Sam Morris of Port Dover, Ontario. When I worked at the Simcoe Reformer we used to call it just plain Dover, which was something our news editor, being a former Toronto Star man, insisted on. Liquor, for example was booze to him. I must add that he did call girls girls. So Dover was Dover.

Well, every other Monday it was my turn to sit across the table from Sam in the Port Dover council chamber. Sam was a very punctual man. Punctual right down to his seven pencils. He'd arrive at 7.45 sharp, piles of papers, printed and stencilled one side only, under his right arm. He never said hi. Just nodded. After all, I was an intruder in Dover, working for the daily in the next town, and what did we know about the business of Port Dover and its council anyway.

I watched Sam often.

He'd put down his papers, upside down. Then he'd lay out his seven pencils, sharp points facing the council table. And he'd sit and chat to the odd early councillor about the fish catch of the day or the ice in the harbor or the pollution in Black Creek.

And then big Harold Schneider, the mayor and the keeper of the biggest inn in Port Dover would walk in.

Sam would note the time, and jot it down. 8.06 p.m. The mayor opens the meeting. The clerk reads the minutes. The clerk reads the correspondence Moved by X and seconded by Y that they be accepted as read. And so on and so on.

Sam wrote all evening. He never stopped. When the debate got hot he wrote just as fast as he did during the reading of the minutes. By 11 p.m. (that's when the Dover boys went home for sure) he'd be down to his last pencil.

Then we'd all get up and head for home.

Not Sam.

He headed for his shop. There he would put all his notes on the old Linotype machine and he'd start to cast lines. Until the entire council report had been set in type. Everything in the order in which it happened, from the opening of the meeting at 8.06 p.m. until the 11 p.m. adjournment.

I asked Sam once what was on the paper he used to bring down to write on. Oh, he smiled, thank heavens for the CBC. They send me a whole batch of copy paper (news releases) every day. I wonder sometimes whether Sam still gets them. I don't here is Oshawa.

Sam knew how to get the most out of life. And it's of him that a lot of colleagues speak when they talk of writing the odd editorial in between golf games. But you know something, Sam was there at the council meetings and he was there when the planning board met and he was there when the committee of adjustment met too. And he was always grinning the grin of a happy man.

I never thought I'd tell Oshawa and Whitby about Dover's Sam Morris, but here it is. Life's full of little surprises. I would have never thought either I'd be the editor of a weekly called THIS WEEK.

Which leaves one more little anecdote for this week's THIS WEEK. During a round-table discussion at the supper table last week I put the question of a name for the paper to my tribe of six. And you should have heard the suggestions. It's got to be something really different and modern and zappy and it's got to swing and make music, I was told. So what did they finally come up with? THE BUBBLE. Nuts?

It's not a bad name, really. Just imagine yourself reminding your neighbor over a morning coffee in the kitchen . . . . "did you see the wedding write-up about the Johnson's daughter in this week's Bubble?" Or think of the girl at the switchboard with a "Good morning, Bubble!" And the reply "Good bubble to you too!"

The name was beginning to grow on the editor of the Bubble until Number One Son called him the Big Bubble and Number Two daughter looked it up in Webster

Well, anyway, Bubble to you too!

Chronicles of Osh

1. And it came to pass in the beginning of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy in the land of Whit, and while most of the Whitites were sound asleep in their tents of abode, that the Pharaoh of Whit lay awake and he could not put himself to slumber, neither could he sleep.

2. For during that day he had made a journey to the land of Osh and he had cast his eye upon the Temple of Osh which stands foursquare and then some in the middle of the land of Osh, and he beheld the pinnacle of Osh called Rundle and behold, he was sorely troubled.

3. Now the people of the land of Osh had built unto themselves this great edifice called Temple of Osh and it was not only a landmark, but it was a structure which the children of the land of Osh had built more or less, stone by stone, through the tithes collected from the Oshites by their rulers.

4. And the Pharaoh, while hobbling by in his camel cart along the outside walls of the Temple of Osh had a thought that flashed through his mind and he muttered to himself saying, behold, the people of the land of Osh have a great thing here. And the thing he spoke of was the Temple of Osh. And moreover he muttered, saying, what a great thing a Temple such as this would be for the Whitites.

5. And these things remained in his mind and on his conscience that very day and into the night.

6. And thus it was that the Pharaoh was neither slumbering nor sleeping in his kingsize resting place in his tent in the land of Whit. And while the Whitites at large were dreaming dreams that were sweet, the Pharaoh contemplated upon the things that had made him troubled as he had hobbled by the Temple of Osh earlier that day.

7. And behold, a vision that showed a golden Temple of Whit, with many pillars and bronze doors appeared unto him and he saw a large throne and upon it a Pharaoh of stature surrounded by henchmen and even some who didn't hench. And the Pharaoh sat up in his hammock, suddenly, and spoke unto his missus, saying, behold I shall give unto the Whitites a Temple of Whit, much like unto the Temple of Osh, only more glorious, and my people shall once more be a happy people with pride that is civic and the land of Whit shall live forever, for behold once the land of Whit has established in its midst a Temple, who would dream of taking away from the temple the land and put it asunder with the land of Osh, never to be heard from again. And Missus Pharaoh smiled a smile of admiration and understanding and did

He logs 1 million safe miles

Helge Forsberg of Edmonton got the royal treatment in Oshawa this week when they laid out the red carpet to the door of his truck cab and gave him a free trip to Niagara Falls by car.

Forsberg, 63-year old truckdriver, was rewarded for driving a million truck miles, accident-free, between Oshawa and points West, mostly Edmonton.

And from the way he enjoyed it all, you'd say he was ready for a few more hundreds of thousands of miles.

Forsberg left Oshawa yesterday for the trip back to Edmonton. He was driving four trucks — piggy-back style.

"It's just great this time of the year," he commented to THIS WEEK, and Mrs. Forsberg who flew into Oshawa for the special occasion, agreed. She knows truck driving, and not just as a truck driver's wife. "She drives too, you know," her husband commented, "and so do my two sons . . . although one of them is a musician too."

It took Forsberg 13 years and three months to log the 1 million accident-free miles. His total mileage to date? About 2.5 million miles, give or take two or three.

Forsberg started in the truck driving business at age 18. And since then "there have been a lot of changes. The new trucks are much more comfortable, what with power brakes and steering and airconditioning . . . ."

And, he adds, they're much faster too.

Forsberg has driven all types of trucks, but he prefers the piggy-back setup, he says. "They're hard to back up, and with a strong wind across the prairies it isn't a piece of cake, but I like it."

By Monday, Forsberg should be back in Edmonton, four trucks delivered from the Kerr Industries lot at Oshawa to the West turn a shoulder that was warm.

8. And the Pharaoh too fell into a deep slumber, and once more all in the land of Whit was peaceful.

9. And on the morning of the next day the people of Whit arose and went about their business in the marketplace of Whit and the traders of Whit traded and the money lenders lent money and Pharaoh climbed upon his camel cart with a gleam in his eye and headed for the tabernacle of Whit, which had previously been a temple with a small 't' but was now merely a tabernacle in the eye of the Pharaoh who had plans that were big.

10. Now the Pharaoh's henchmen were informed about this great thing that was to come to pass in the land of Whit and all nodded in one accord saying, heah, yeah, oh great Pharaoh. And there were some who said the temple should be known as the Temple of Des.

11. And in the land of Osh which bordered on the land of Whit, there were among the Oshites some who were diligently putting bears on the road the Pharaoh was to tread to accomplish his new Temple and there were some who planned trips to the Holy Mountain of Qupee there to inform the High and Mighty John and his servant Darcy of the things that were to come to pass in the land of Whit, and there to point out to the holy twosome on the Mountain of Qupee that there was an abundance of extra space in the land of Osh which could be used by the Whitites.

12. And among the Oshites there were those who favored a revolving throne in the Temple of Osh, one to be used when the Pharaoh of Whit and his henchmen used the inner sanctum of the Temple of Osh and one for the every day use of the elders of Osh under the wise rulership of the Wayward Beevee.

13. And the Chronicler of Osh sympathized with the Pharaoh of Whit and he said, but just unto himself, it is not proper for a Pharaoh to rule the Whitites from other than a temple. And he was certain in his own heart that the H and M John and his servant Darcy would also see the logic of such reasoning and he saw in his ball of crystal a Temple of Whit more glorious than that in the land of Osh and behold among all the sanctums in the Temple, the one that fared well was the biggest, for the Whitites were turning out in large multitudes to receive from the Pharaoh and his henchmen their due fare well, for there were many among them who had gone belly up, so to speak, from the crushing burden of the tithes levied to build the Temple.

Whitby ready for another twinning

The town of Whitby and the City of Longueuil, Quebec will soon be actively twinning again.

At a meeting held with the Twinning Committee recently in Whitby, Reeve T. J. Edwards, chairman of the committee, discussed the June visit to Longueuil.

A tentative schedule was drawn up:

On June 12, 10 a.m., the twinners will depart Thornton Road CNR station by train. All persons going by train are asked to be at the CNR station not later than 9:30 a.m.

The visitors will arrive at Montreal Central Station at 3:19 p.m.; on June 12. Bus transportation will be provided from the station to La Barre Motel.

All will depart for reception and exchange of twinning vows at Longueuil city hall at 6 p.m.

June 13 will be a free day on which the visitors from Whitby will have the opportunity of visiting their counterparts. Some members will be able to visit the House of Culture, the Longueuil Historical Museum, Man and His World and La Ronde if they wish.

On Sunday, June 14 there may be an Ecumenical or interdenominational church service at 11 a.m. Also that day at 1:30 p.m. a luncheon and the Official twinning ceremonies will take place. At 3:50 p.m. the visitors will depart LaBarre for Montreal Central Station, and at 4:50 p.m. will depart central station Montreal for return trip to Thornton Road Station to arrive at 9:45 p.m.

The Reeve advised the committee that the plans are tentative and further word is expected from Mayor Robides of Longueuil.

The rail fare for each person is $17 return and cheques should be given to the Clerk prior to June 5. It is necessary to know how many are going by May 20 in order that some arrangements can be made to obtain a coach car from the CNR similar to last year.

With respect to accommodation, the Clerk should be advised as soon as possible in order that arrangements may either be made for a motel, private homes or at the Jesuit Mission. It was indicated that the rates at the motel are approximately $18 per room for each evening, while accommodation at the private home and Jesuit Mission is $5 per evening including breakfast.

COUNTY TOWN SINGERS

The County Town Singers are considering sending approximately 10 couples to Longueuil and on Saturday, June 13 the twinners are considering renting a central room at La Barre. The Reeve said this suggestion would be looked into as more information is received from Mayor Robidas.

The Reeve said organizations planning to twin with a counterpart in Longueuil should be prepared to present a token memento representative of Whitby or their particular organization at the Official Twinning ceremony to take place on Sunday afternoon.

With respect to the return visit during the weekend of July 31 to August 2, the Town has booked the Regal Room at the Centennial Building for the Friday Reception and the Sunday afternoon Luncheon and Twinning Ceremony.

It was also proposed that the guests might like the opportunity of visiting the Ontario Science Centre in Toronto.

Eedee Awards highlight of Superscope

By Jo Aldwinckle
Women's editor

The Ontario Fashion Design Awards for 1970, the EeDees, signifying Excellence of Design, were presented by the Hon. Stanley J. Randall, minister of trade and development, at a glittering gathering at the Inn on the Park.

One hundred and twenty-five designs were modelled in a fast-paced stage show and 29 awards were presented.

Voted best of show in the women's apparel was a midi-length evening gown of black broadtail fur with a deep V decolletage and shoe-string halter ties. In the opinion of the judges, this gown expressed the "insurgence of the '70's".

In the men's apparel, the best of show award went to a blazer suit, teaming a single-breasted royal blue blazer, with white-braided edges, and cream wool cuffed trousers.

Cynthia Waye, a student of St. Lawrence College, Kingston, won first prize in the student category for her suede trouser-suit, a rust-colored, single button vest, suede minipants and leggings composed of circles of rust and gold suede, laced together.

The styles presented will set the trend for fall. There was a strong influence of the vogue of the 1930's: fringed scarves, calf-length coats, funky Garbo hats, snoods, beaded bands on the brow, colored hosiery, long-earrings, chunky shoes with platform soles, buckled belts in leather and suede, chain necklaces by the mile and close crochet hats.

Accessories will be the thing in the soaring 70's.

Ponchos appeared for beach or street wear, over a bikini or pants. Cat suits, a glamorous version of grand-dad's long johns, were veiled in vivid chiffon and Claire Haddad's white poncho was quickly transformed into a circular skirt.

Hand-painted leather made news. Leather in all its new treatments will still be a prime favorite come fall. A ginger leather coat was deeply hemmed at mid-calf with white Mongolian fox. A suede midi was collared in Spanish lamb and straight out of the pages of Razzle, the co-ed magazine of the 30's, was a long leather coat, wreathed in raccoon.

For the undecided, a detachable border transformed a black cape glove leather midi into a mini. Canadian red fox fur hid the velcro that united the coat with its added length.

Double-breasted jackets lead the way in men's wear in plaid and plain combinations. Men's overcoats will be much longer and more important with fur collars or coachman collars. There were also full-length fur coats for men.

The Norfolk jacket, leather jerkins and fake-fur car coats will find a place in the male wardrobe. Described as a "social revolution" were double-knit suits for men, sharp in bright navy blue and tobacco brown, well tailored, machine washable and great, man, great.

Elen Henderson won an award for her gypsy dress, a gay cotton creation for a little girl

Eedee Fashion award winners for best coat design in 1970. For him, an all wool camel double-breasted short topcoat with body fit flap and patch sewn in front panels. For her, an ocelot fur in trim military style, wide black belt, superb collar detail and midi length skirt.

Maureen Langridge best actress in DDF

by jo aldwinckle

By Jo Aldwinckle

Still aloft on a pink cloud of unbelievable happiness is Maureen Langridge who was named the best actress in the Dominion Drama Festival in Winnipeg last week.

Maureen was in Whitby this weekend visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Bell, and she talked about the play, "A Day in the Death of Joe Egg" in which she filled the leading role, that won her the coveted, Nella Jefferies trophy. The play, performed by the St. Thomas More Players, won the regional award to be eligible for the week-long Dominion finals.

"It is best described as a black comedy," Maureen said. "The play's author Peter Nicholls has injected humor into a depressing subject. It shows how parents live with their spastic, eight-year-old daughter, Joe. The mother lives for the child and is always hopeful that Joe's condition will improve. The husband breaks down.

"He cannot keep up the pretense and attempts to kill Joe, but fails.

"Each of the six character has direct communication with the audience on whom the play has a tremendous im-

The invitation said "Black tie", but it might just as well have said "pink shirts" or "organdy bows" because they were there, plenty of them and this was a very dressed-up occasion.

It was the dinner given by the Ontario Department of Trade and Development and the Ontario Fashion Institute for the presentation of the EeDee (Excellence of Design) fashion awards.

The competition is held to encourage better design by Ontario clothing manufacturers, some 500 of whom were invited to take part. My estimate is that they all came to the dinner, anyway.

If you haven't been to one of these ram-swammies for some time, you'd be amazed. The women don't change very much. The "see-throughs" are a fake and the bra-less look is blah; only those who shouldn't, adopt it. It is the men who are the peacocks.

They still prefer black for dinner dress but there are a few metallic fabric jackets and the collar line has changed from silk reveres to a narrow roll bound with satin. However, it's the colored shirt that makes the man.

Ruffled and tucked it comes in sunset pink, chartreuse, lavender and a soft orange, complementary to grey hair but not so kind to blood-shot eyes.

The soft shirt has subtly taken over the occasional stiff front looks like a breast-plate by comparison.

Buyers were present from the United States, the United Kingdom, Spain, Scandinavia, Australia and Japan and the host, the Honorable Stanley J. Randall, was in fine fettle.

"It seems today's women still favors clothes that can be likened to barbed wire fences," he said. "Clothes that appear to protect the property without obstructing the view.

"The emancipated woman never puts off till tomorrow what she can put on today and the husband who wonders what his wife wants with two new dresses soon finds out that it's two new hats.

"Today's man no longer takes his clothes as a matter of course, he takes them as a matter of discourse. It's generally agreed that men have finished toe-testing the temperature of fashion and have taken the colorful plunge."

Now, isn't that what I just said?

Last year's mini will make a jumper for daddy.

An Open Letter To Parents Of Secondary School Students In Ontario County

ONTARIO COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION
555 Rossland Rd. W., Oshawa

Many of you have received, during the last few days, a letter designed to make you worry about the quality of schooling that your sons and daughters may receive next September.

The Ontario County Board reassures you that, with the co-operation of its secondary school principals and teachers, our secondary schools will be properly staffed for the coming school year. When the present moratorium in the province on the hiring of secondary school teachers is lifted, the same pools from which teachers are normally recruited in March will still be open. Advertising, interviewing, and hiring would proceed in June in a normal way and the principals would then be able to organize their programs and staffs as planned for September.

We should explain briefly the nature of the present dispute in the province. It is the common practice in Ontario for Boards to negotiate with their teachers on salary levels. This, year in Toronto, the Secondary School Teachers' Federation demanded the right to determine how many teachers the Toronto Board of Education should employ as well as what their salaries should be. If the teachers were granted that right, the Board would lose complete control to the teachers of two-thirds of the Board's total budget.

All the Boards in the province recognized this as a major threat to the control of School Boards overthe management of their schools and their accountability to the public.

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation made the issue a provincial issue by placing sanctions on the Toronto Board that prevent all teachers in Ontario from taking positions with the Toronto Board. The School Boards of Ontario, in self-defence, then decided that they would suspend the hiring of all secondary school teachers until the dispute was satisfactorily resolved.

The Ontario County Board and all other Boards, including Toronto, have agreed to the meaningful involvement of their teachers in working out the proper staffing of the schools so that teachers could make appropriate recommendations to their Boards. The Boards, however, must retain the right to make the final decision.

As soon as the Secondary School Teachers' Federation removes its provincial sanction, hiring of teachers can proceed and our schools will be staffed.

WHO ARE YOU CALLING EXTREME ?

By Francine Fortier

The new midi and maxi looks in women's fashion aren't being received with an entirely favorable reaction.

Women don't relish the idea of extra yards of material hanging and flapping around their ankles. For the last few years, the mini has given women the freedom of unrestricted movement. Even before the mini, skirts only floundered about the knee and really didn't get in the way.

But now . . . women's ankles are being tied, and the great feeling of freedom is vanishing.

Already in great fashion centres overseas, minis are beoming almost impossible to buy. Canadian women, no doubt, will hang on to their minis for a little while longer, but soon the ax will hit them too.

Besides the nuisance and the discomfort of the new longer length, another factor to be considered is the aesthetic value.

UGLY

Some think the midi or maxi look is just plain ugly. Take a look at some of the new styles . . . some of the materials are so flimsy and shapeless that they make the wearer look flimsy and shapeless. And this is one look fashion is dictating so there's bound to be an avid following.

With the chunky-heeled clod-hoppers on the feet, the frizzy mass of hair topping the head, and the shapeless body in between, what visions of femininity does the world have to look forward to now?

Mind you, it doesn't have to be as bad as it sounds.

It is just as fashionable to wear an attractively fitting midi or maxi that highlights the best features of a woman — be it her figure, face, or character.

And a woman with good taste, can tone down the extremes of clunky shoes and ultra-absurd hairdos. It's not difficult to make the best out of a fashion. But it's also very easy to get carried away and allow the new look to take over the person.

NAUGHTY NINETEENTH

However, people have been getting "carried away" with fads and fashions for centuries. Some of our so-called new looks — see-throughs, maxis and the "nude look" are merely re-runs of fashions of over a hundred years ago.

According to Cosmetics and Adornment, by Max Wykes-Joyce, the "naughty nineteenth" century posed a question similar to a question we face today — where does decency stop?

"In England" says Wykes-Joyce, "1800 witnessed the undressed look at its prime."

The author goes on to say that the fashionable girl's entire wardrobe for an evening out, including jewellery and slippers, weighed no more than eight ounces.

"In Georgia" says Wykes-Joyce, "clothing at this time emphasised the extremely slender waists and vast bosoms of the fashionable. The minute waists were cultivated in the following way.

"Soon after a girl's birth, a leather belt was sewn tightly round her middle. When the child's growth snapped the stitches it was replaced by a second, sewn equally tightly.

"These successive bands resulted in a disproportionate width to hips and shoulders. The girls lavished so much attention upon their breasts that no man had eyes for any other part of their bodies.

"When a girl was married, it was her spouse's privilege to remove the final belt which he cut off her body with a dagger on the marriage night. A custom, sometimes productive of very fatal accidents."

HAVOC

At the same time, the Ottoman Emperor in Turkey, was concerned with female exposure and "by its havoc upon the morals of his loyal subjects." The emperor ordered that all gowns should open at the neck only sufficient for getting the clothes on and off.

However, in England, as makeup colors were changing from bright-red powders to pallid off-white, the blushes underneath it all were deepening. The fashion now was near-nudity for women, and effeminity for men.

"In 1808" says Wykes-Joyce, "The Faro Table was published which recounted a conversation between an old fashioned 'grande dame' whose withered face of three-score was enamelled with pearl-powder and rouge, and a pale and perfumed beau.

"Grande Dame: 'Don't tell me but when young women expose themselves in public with bare bosoms and transparent limbs, it requires more Stoicism in private than ever Plato possessed, to resist the implied invitation to the senses.'

"Perfumed Beau: 'Tout au contraire — 'pon honour my Lady — when we can see through the curtain for nothing, it would be a horrible bore to pay five thousand pounds for only drawing it a little aside. No — we flirt, we talk scandal, we make ourselves agreeable in a Platonic way, but anything more would be quite Gothic! quite Gothic, upon my soul!'"

BLOOMERS

Half-way through the century was the introduction by two American women of another "indecent" article of clothing — bloomers. It was condemned by others as an attempt to masculinize women. It should be added, at the time, an English gentleman's toilet consisted of hair and beard dye, perfumed chalk for the too-freshly colored, rouge for the too-pale, castor-oil, meal and beeswax — a mixture believed to promote the growth and maintain the health of the hair — and tweezers for plucking unwanted eyebrows.

By 1860, women were relying on more natural aids to enhance their beauty. Ball-gowns were decorated at the bosom with sprays of real flowers, for the freshening of which tiny water bottles were hung between the breasts.

The most "perverse" ornament closed the end of the century.

"The wearers of this ornament" says Wykes-Joyce, "revealed it to few, and the men who lavished the jewels preferred that the knowledge should not pass beyond the walls of the boudoir and the dingy back rooms of those who prepared the women.

RINGS

"Without doubt, however, a few young women in London, in Paris, and some in New York wore breast-rings. These ornaments were jewelled to match their ear-rings, and girls often had ear-lobes and nipples pierced at the same time, so that they could simultaneously wear the complete set of jewels. For daily use the girls wore ordinary tiny gold rings, like 'sleeper' ear-rings, through their nipples. But on gala occasions their finest gew-gaws were in order. One Gaiety Girl was said to have a string of pearls stretching from breast tip to breast tip, and an emerald in her navel."

And that makes the most-progressive woman of today look conservative.

The midi and men

In a man-on-the-street survey, six men were asked by THIS WEEK what they thought of the new midi look.

Frank Hill, RR No. 6, Bowmanville: "I don't like it. I just got used to the mini-skirt and I think it's great. The midi hides women's legs."

Asuako Koranteng, Oshawa: "The midi is out of the Victorian age. But then the mini, I don't think should be worn on the street."

Bob Reid, 796 Lakeview: "I don't like it. I think it's old fashioned. I like the minis better because they're more feminine."

Graham Dallas, Hampton: "I think it's strictly a personal matter. If this is what the women want, fine, let them wear it. Really, I don't care one way or the other."

Arthur Poirier, 150 William St.: "I don't like it. It's going back too much to the old times, I prefer the mini — it shows more girl."

Cecil Cain, 652 Brookside Drive: "I guess it doesn't worry me too much. It's probably a sales gimmick. If the manufacturers don't go along with the change in styles they won't sell as many clothes. What the girl wears and looks nice in depends on her age. But I do like the mini."

Gala celebration 10th anniversary of Polish Scouting

The 10th anniversary of Polish Scouting and Guiding in Oshawa was celebrated Saturday night at a ball at the Sikorski Polish Veterans' Centre.

Close to 500 guests attended the gala event which was preceded by a dinner for guests of honor.

These included the Reverend Father Jan Chwist and the Reverend Father Zygmunt Kozak, chaplain of the Polish Scouts; Alderman Ruth Bestwick, representing the mayor of Oshawa; Edward Broadbent, MP; Clifford Pilkey MPP and Mrs. Pilkey; G. K. Joseph Peters, St. Gregory's Council, K of C. and Mrs. Peters; Jan Jaszuba Chief Commissioner Polish Scouts of Canada and Mrs. Kaszuba; Mrs. Sofia Stohandel, Chief Commissioner Polish Girl Guides in Canada; leaders and instructors of the Scouts and Guides; presidents of Polish organizations and the parent association.

Especially honored were Waclaw Zenkowicz, first Polish Scout Master and Mrs. Bronislawa Labus, organizer and first leader of Polish Girl Guides in Oshawa.

In his after-dinner address, the Chief Commissioner said that the Polish Scouts and Guides were part of the world-wide family of scouting, united in Christian ethics, human brotherhood and good fellowship.

He recalled the history of scouting in Poland. Under German and Russian occupation, he said, those over 16 had joined the underground home army and formed the Rover Infantry Brigade in the Warsaw uprising of 1944. Those under 16, boys and girls, did Red Cross work.

"In Canada, from Montreal to Vancouver, Polish Scouts and Guides are following the Baden-Powell code at summer and winter camps and also preserving the best in their heritage to enrich the Canadian fabric."

Ed Broadbent congratulated the parents for their support and active encouragement of the Scouts and Guides. Alderman Bestwick, Clifford Pilkey and other head table guests expressed good wishes.

Michael Malarz, chairman and master of ceremonies, lined up the guests for a grand march into the ballroom which had been especially decorated with floral murals and a stage back-drop.

Dancing to Leo Spellman's outstanding orchestra continued until 1 a.m. An appreciated feature was the operatic tenor voice of Ralph Shering whose singing brought spontaneous applause.

Warmly welcomed were late arrivals, Mayor Desmond Newman of Whitby and Mrs. Newman.

A very happy Denise Dugas, nine, 356 Highland Ave., is the winner of this new bicycle. Controller Margaret Shaw and Sonny Lytle drew the name. The draw is one of 12 draws made for coolers, chaise lounges, etc. at the opening of Lytle's service station, Wilson and Olive streets.

pact. It's a play you don't soon forget."

English-born Maureen came to Canada in 1959 and met her future husband, Ray, while both were taking part in an Oshawa Little Theatre production of "You Touched Me".

They were married in 1961 and resided in Oshawa until two years ago when they moved to Ancaster, Ontario. During the six years Maureen played in nine OLT productions.

"I shall always be grateful to Harry Chapman," (OLT director) she said, "because he trusted me with the part of Mrs. Tancred, the grief-stricken widow, in "Juno and the Paycock". I had played ingenue roles until then and wanted to try something more challenging.

"I was studying in Toronto at the School of Radio Drama and then came the opportunity to play Saint Joan in "The Lark" for OLT.

" 'Roots' and "The Rattle of a Simple Man" followed. Ray was opposite me in that and he was my stage husband again in "Joe Egg".

Acting is our only hobby and we really enjoy playing opposite each other. We are very lucky that there are three drama groups in the Hamilton area, so there is always a play being cast and opportunities for everyone."

At the moment the Langridges are ready for a rest. We've been working on "Joe Egg" for six or seven months and we want to have a carefree summer with our children, David, eight, and Christine, six and a half years old."

Maureen's award may be the last of its kind. Changes are in the wind for the Dominion Drama Festival and the competitive element may be discontinued.

In any case Oshawa theatre devotees will always be proud of the fact that a graduate of Oshawa Little Theatre emerged the best amateur actress in the Dominion.

Doctor offers advice

Watch your food this summer; poison danger high

Warmer weather in the Oshawa area means the advent of activities that will bring a lot of enjoyment to local residents.

It can also mean sickness and perhaps death. Summer picnics and banquets can become tragedies unless a few simple precautions are taken.

Botulism, salmonella and staphylococcus infections resulting from improperly prepared food can lead to upset stomachs and in some cases to death.

In a recent interview, a doctor offered a few suggestions aimed at lessening the dangers of food poisoning.

"Proper refrigeration immediately after the food is prepared will greatly lessen the danger of staphylococcus food poisoning," he said. "The incubation period usually takes from two to six hours.

"This particular food poisoning will usually occur at picnics, church suppers and the like where there is often a time lapse of up to eight hours between food preparation and consumption."

The doctor explained that staphylococcus bacteria is a common organism.

"I'd be willing to bet that we'd find this bacteria on your fingers or mine right now," he said. "It would only take a small cut on a cook's finger infected with 'staph' to contaminate the food. This, coupled with the long period in a warm room, will lead to trouble."

The doctor added that such poisoning is never fatal.

"There will be severe gastrointestinal disturbances that will make you wish you were dead, but the case fatality rate for 'staph' infection is zero," he said.

Time is the only cure for such poisoning, with recovery usually coming within a 48-hour period.

Starchy foods such as certain types of cake fillings, eclairs, cream puffs, gravy and salad dressing were labelled the main culprits in staphylococcus food poisoning.

"This doesn't mean for one minute that other foods such as meat and dairy products won't harbor the bacteria though," said the spokesman.

A more serious food poisoning, salmonella, was also outlined during the interview.

"Salmonella, a food-borne bacterial infection, can be divided into three or four main groups. Whereas 'staph' food poisoning results from a chemical poison produced in the food, salmonella reacts once it is ingested."

Foods high in protein, especially eggs, are blamed for one type of salmonella.

"There was a case of persons infected through eating cake mixes made with powdered eggs a few years back," said the doctor. "This was salmonella."

He added, however, that the heat of an oven is enough to kill the organism and that it hit the people who licked the spoon or ate some of the uncooked batter. People who eat raw eggs are also taking a chance.

Another type of salmonella is attributed to shellfish as has become apparent from recent deaths in Quebec.

The doctor explained that oysters and clams, in obtaining food by straining water through their systems, might ingest salmonella bacteria. By eating these shellfish raw, a person could become infected.

The symptoms of the milder types of salmonella infection resemble those of staphylococcus. There is, however, a fatality rate of up to 10 per cent. Antibiotics can be used to cure the infection.

Diseases such as typhoid fever are loosely classed along with salmonella infections in that they are food-borne bacterial infections.

"Food-borne typhoid, dysentry and other diseases of the group usually occur on a small scale only," the doctor said. "The great epidemics are water-borne and to a lesser extent milk-borne."

He blamed a typhoid epidemic in Aberdeeen, Scotland a few years back on one can of infected meat.

"There was nothing wrong with the meat itself," he said. "It came from South America where they cook the heated cans in river water to create a vacuum. There was probably a small break in the seal of one of the cans so that typhoid-infected river water seeped in."

A less common but highly toxic infection was also outlined by the doctor.

"The most toxic substance formed in food by bacteria is botulism. Canned food provides the anaerobic conditions needed for the germination of spores not killed in processing.

"An anaerobe is a micro-organism that thrives without free oxygen. Vacuum canning, warmth and time form ideal conditions for the development of the spores."

The doctor added that commercial canning processes usually destroy these spores.

"Outbreaks of botulism usually result from home-canned meat products. If these were cooked when opened, the spores would be killed by the heat."

Of the more than 2,000 cases of botulism on record, the fatality rate is extremely high, from 60 to 80 per cent.

estate section. Phyl headed up the Oshawa Journal's classified department, She knows her business.

But back to THIS WEEK and what's new.

During the past three years upwards of 32,000 Oshawa and Whitby residents slowly but surely got used to a new visitor on the Oshawa scene. The new visitor came every Wednesday, and for some time even on Fridays. The visitor's name was Oshawa Journal. The visitor turned into an acquaintance for some and a friend for many. I dearly loved that visitor. We got to know each other perhaps better than most of you got to know it. Sometimes it took me a whole weekend to get it dressed up just so you'd be pleased and just so your week would go a little better.

And then your friend and my friend became sick. And no matter how the surgeons operated, our friend became very sick. And then, a week ago on Monday our friend died. The Oshawa Journal was no more. It went bankrupt.

(Now if I was a great accountant and a man of finance I could probably tell you the exact illness of which my friend died. But I can't write a coroner's report, and obituaries were never my strong point anyway.)

Last week's first issue of THIS WEEK (it takes some getting used to, doesn't it) was the result of two days of very hard slugging and here we are putting out volume one, number two.

Edco Properties Ltd. is the publisher of THIS WEEK. This company, though new to the Oshawa scene, believes in our team. Our team believes in this new company. Together, and with your continued interest we're going to build THIS WEEK into a winner of which Oshawa can be justly proud. We're going to dig for you behind the scenes, we'll help bring you bargains, we'll try and make you laugh, and we'll even help you cry a little now and then. We'll help you make Oshawa and Whitby better places to live in. We like it here, but we want to start liking it even better.

As THIS WEEK grows, "the team" will probably grow. For now, just try us out for size. Mike Walker, Sandy Wragg and Phyllis Millar are the ad people. Al Martin is the circulation manager. (He knows more of Oshawa's promising youngsters than almost any school teacher.) Armour Hanna is our accountant. (I've often told Armour I could win a Pulitzer prize if my feeling for words matched his feeling for figures.) And then there's the editorial staff, mentioned last, very politely: Francine Fortier, Jo Aldwinckle and yours truly as editor.

The publisher wants me to point out he's happy to have hired people who have served Oshawa, Whitby and area in the past and are familiar with its needs in editorial, advertising and circulation.

The new company looks forward to doing an even better job in the future.

The publisher also wants me to point out, and I do so very happily, that we're here to stay — next week, and the week after and so on.

As far as I'm concerned, it'll be fun getting reacquainted.

See you next week in THIS WEEK.

Students are his beat

Policeman with an office at high school

The Oshawa police department says it is considering placing youth bureau officers in some of Oshawa's high schools.

The Mississauga police department has already tried this idea and found that it is working.

There's a policeman stationed in Glenforest Secondary School in Mississauga because students wanted him there.

Constable Greg Jones, of the Mississauga Police Department's Youth Bureau, is not at the school to police the students. He's there to offer the students and the rest of the community help, counselling and advice. He used to work out of a church basement but when the school opened three months ago, the 600 students voted in favor of getting Jones involved in the school's Social Action Group. Other members of the group include representatives from the area ministerial association, the Big Brothers and the Family Counselling Service.

Peel County Board of Education Officials believe it is the first time in Ontario that a police officer has his office in a school. Jones fits in well with the students and teachers. He is young, 27, wears "mod" clothes instead of a uniform and gets along well with students, teachers, parents and school officials.

His "beat" isn't restricted to Glenforest students. He is also ready to help 5,000 other students attending two secondary and 12 public schools within a two-mile radius.

His duties form part of a working arm to expand the school's services and to make the school a focal point of the community.

Jones might be described as a 1970 version of the old "cop on the beat" image. Instead of walking the beat he keeps close contact with the community by working from its hub . . . the school.

Working with other specially trained professionals gives plenty of scope in which to work. He is also aware that he is part of a growing community school program.

He explained that previously a policeman's job was limited. He apprehended a youth, charged him, took him to court, saw him punished.

"Now we can call on all available sources to look into a youth's background, determine the cause of trouble and suggest help," he said.

"For instance, after interviewing the parents we often find the child has emotional problems and we recommend psychiatric help.

"By combining our roles and working as a unit we can often pinpoint faults and put a youth on the right path before he goes astray," Jones said. The idea is to help, not punish," he said.

Already the concept is showing results, according to Glenforest principal, Norman Hodgson.

Since Jones joined the school, Hodgson reports there have not been any acts of vandalism, broken windows or obscenities written on walls.

"We feel that as a staff and student body Glenforest must serve all the community and help if we can in the problems of the community. We as a school accept the responsibility that even though our prime function is one of education we cannot ignore the problems of students outside of this area," Hodgson said.

He added that the youth officer function is an expansion of the school role. At the same time, he stressed that Jones was not a policeman assigned only to Glenforest Secondary School.

As part of the Social Action Group, Jones works with parole and probation officials, social workers, teachers, psychiatrists and psychologists.

Jones enjoys working with young people and appreciates the opportunity to help solve their problems.

"The students are looking for guidelines. Here in the school we can provide the type of guidance they want and need, firsthand," he said.

Hodgson pointed out that the school has already established educational and recreational facilities and is now concentrating on social and economic needs.

"Mississauga is a child-oriented community and the school must be part of that community. A school must provide services and get involved seven days a week, 52 weeks a year", he said.

"We want the kids to care more about their activities, the school and community," said Hodgson.

Reaction to the project has been favorable. Archie Turner, Director of the Peel County Board of Education, and Mississauga Police Chief, Garnet McGill, also support the project.

No bulldozer approach for downtown date all business around the four corners and to make it an attractive and convenient place for shoppers.

His proposal stirred up much public and political controversy and council asked urban renewal director Paynter and city planners to come up with an alternate scheme which would eliminate the major malls.

The result was a plan suggesting the creation of a number of so-called "mini malls" which would be formed from existing and combined smaller blocks Each block would be a small mall unto itself. The fragmentation which could result from such a scheme would be off-set by pedestrian crosswalks both at street-level and either under or over the street.

Paynter feels the final answer will be somewhere between the two schemes. "Our own scheme is the most practical approach to date," says Paynter. "The difference is that we have retained the existing traffic pattern, and also adopted the Murray Jones' land use proposals.

"We will probably modify both plans and come up with something in between."

The urban renewal director feels that it is financially impossible for the city to implement the Jones' plan at this time without financial assistance from the federal and provincial government.

In the summer of 1968, a freeze was pronounced on all future urban renewal assistance by the federal government while the whole question of urban renewal was reconsidered by Paul Hellyer task force on housing. Then Hellyer resigned from the cabinet and minister without portfolio Robert Andras took over the housing duties of Hellyer.

Paynter feels that Andras is working hard to formulate a new assistance plan for urban renewal and suggests that the freeze may be off by the early fall.

He's optimistic that an Oshawa redevelopment scheme would receive early and favorable response, once the grants become available again. "A lot of cities ran into trouble because they used the bull-dozer approach to clear the land and then rebuild from scratch," he says. "In the process a lot of housing was destroyed. This is one of the reasons why the urban renewal assistance was frozen."

The trend today is towards rehabilitation of existing buildings where possible instead of rebuilding. Oshawa's plans include the construction of large amounts of good housing where none now exists.

Few residents will be displaced so that land can be cleared and new residential developments constructed. Rather the buildings slated for redevelopment are mainly commercial enterprises in poor condition. The area on the east bank of the Oshawa Creek and north-west of the central business heart is aimed towards housing.

"Right now private developers want to develop and they can't use the Jones' scheme," explains Paynter. "We need an acceptable, workable plan for the downtown." When this is devised, he hopes city council will approve its submission to federal and provincial authorities which handle such applications.

The Murray V. Jones scheme recommended that buildings in the heart of the core area be restricted to a density of 6,000 square feet, per 1,000 square feet of land. The present zoning by-law for the entire business district is also six to one. But the twin office-apartment tower complex that Citel Developments Limited wants to build would have a density of 7.3 to one.

DENSITY DILEMMA

Planning board is now considering the density for the core area as a whole and the relationship of the new proposal to any change in the density. Paynter points out that with the tight money market and high interest rates, the developers could not afford to build at any less than a 7.3 to 1 density.

I don't disagree with the recommendation of a density of six to one for the core, says the urban renewal director, but "every proposal that comes along has to be judged on its own merits, the affects the increase will have on pedestrian and vehicular traffic and the aesthetics of the matter.

In this instance, Paynter feels that a rezoning of 7.3 for Citel alone would be warranted. "It fits well into the downtown and is not that much higher than six to one," he says. "Really, this development is going to provide us with a population downtown. It would only reflect good on the downtown, and would be a step forward in improving its looks."

The city should not discourage this project, the urban renewal director feels, because it will bring in $170,000 in taxes annually compared to the $7,000 which is presently levied off the eastern portion of the Prince-Bond-Church and Richmond Street block. Services don't have to be increased at all to accommodate this new building, he says.

Although Paynter would prefer that the density of the downtown as a whole remain at six to one, he feels the odd building on a different scale would add variety and interest to the skyline. The downtown is to become an institutional and commercial area but there will be sufficient retail to serve the workers and dwellers in the core area. These stores will provide the kind of personal service which is not found in shopping centres, Paynter explains.

The influx of office workers into the heart of the city along with the new office developments will awake a demand for specialty and personal shops in the downtown. Some of the side streets may well be closed to traffic and this will permit such open air activities as sidewalk cafes.

DRASTIC CHANGE

Paynter says the redevelopment program will never stop. "If we can get just these two projects off the ground (the Citel Twin Towers and the Civic Tower building on the north east corner of Athol and Centre Streets), then the change this town will see in five years will be drastic."

Paynter will be concentrating his efforts on the redevelopment of the downtown area west of Sim-

Anti-Lenin resolution approved at meet

Oshawa citizens of Central European descent met in the Dnipro Hall on Sunday afternoon to oppose plans for the centenary celebration of Lenin's birthday.

Chairman Nick Bartkiw explained that the purpose was to present for approval a resolution to be forwarded to the secretary-general of the United Nations Organization and to the provincial and federal governments of Canada. Meetings of the type held here took place throughout Ontario on Sunday.

The resolution protests the honoring of Lenin as "the great humanist" on the 100th anniversary of his birth.

John Ivanco spoke on behalf of the Canadian-Slovak League Branch 6 and an address was given by Alex Sosna past-president of the Canadian Ukrainian Committee.

They reminded their listeners that eight million people were exterminated by Lenin's CheKa and NKVD in 1917-38. Lenin's disciples crushed the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in the 1930's and murdered 30 archbishops and bishops and hundreds of priests. He did the same with the Ukrainian Catholic Church in 1946.

Lenin wrote: "We have never made a secret of the fact that our revolution is only a beginning, that it will achieve victory only if we set aflame the whole world with similar revolutions."

How can the UN expect the free world to pay tribute to such a barbarian who said: "Three-quarters of mankind must die if necessary, to ensure the other quarter for communism."

Bartkiw concluded, "We appeal to you to protest most strongly the decision to celebrate this tyrant's annivesary." He asked his audience to study and endorse the following resolution:

Whereas the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations has concurred with the controversial decision of UNESCO in the observance of the centenary of birth of Lenin, and,

Whereas Lenin has been the founder of the Sovet Union which through brutal force had subjugated many nations that immediately after the Russian Revolution proclaimed their independence and even had greatly curtailed the national independence of those nations which had established their sovereign states during and after the First World War, reducing them to the status of so-called satellite states, and,

Whereas Soviet Regime has flagrantly violated the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, supressed political freedom as well as freedom of speech, press, and religion, as evidenced by severe prison terms and forced labour camps meted out to dissenting journalists, writers and intellectuals, and,

Whereas the centenary of Lenin's birth is skilfully exploited to promote communist propaganda, exalting Lenin as a great humanist while in fact he was the founder of the most tyrannical regime, and the most totalitarian empire the world has ever seen, and,

Whereas We, the representatives of national organisations of Central European Captive Nations with our affiliated member organisations, and as Citizens of Canada, dedicated to uphold and preserve democratic principles in firm belief that only the democratic system offers the best opportunity for the development of the individual and nations,

Be it, therefore, resolved that this Meeting of the Organisations and Members of the Undersigned Representatives of Central European Nations strongly condemn the exploitation of Lenin's centenary for propaganda purposes and call upon its members and fellow citizens to expose the hypocrisy and deceit of such propaganda. This Meeting, and its Committee is also opposed to the use of public funds and accommodations for exhibiting Lenin's works in Public Libraries and other Institutions supported by public funds..

McLaughlin Gallery this week

Saturday night the East Central Ontario Art Association Ninth Annual Juried show opened at the Robert McLaughlin Gallery. This exhibition has been presented by an Association that was formed 10 years ago at a recreation workshop in Port Hope.

From a membership of 27 the Association has grown to a membership of 200. The members come from as far west as Toronto, as far east as Belleville and as far north as Bancroft.

To those members of the gallery and the public in general, it will be most interesting to see this show in comparison with the two earlier ones. You will see a greater collection of styles, and techniques, reflecting the fact that these artists come from different backgrounds, different towns, different art instruction and different talents.

Come and make your own judgments as to the developing visual arts amateur situation in Oshawa and District, and the expanding area.

Stratford season coming up

It's going to be a great season, once again, at Stratford this year.

An exciting festival play bill of Shakespeare, Sheridan and Ibsen plus three premieres at the Avon are all combined at this pretty, quiet, unique town on the Avon River.

The Merchant of Venice opens on June 8 at the Festival Theatre. This is one of Shakespeare's most powerful and controversial plays. And it is as relevant today in its exploration of the twin themes of justice and mercy as it was when first written almost 400 years ago . . . one of the most compelling courtroom scenes ever presented on stage.

Cymbeline opens on July 21 at the Festival theatre. Often called one of Shakespeare's most underrated plays, Cymbeline is an experimental foray into a fairy-tale world where good always triumphs, reflecting the "serene optimism" of the playwright in the full maturity of his art.

The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria premieres on July 20 at the Avon theatre. A tour de force for two actors, the play sketches the tragi-comic ramifications of a confrontation between intellect and nature.

The School for Scandal opens on June 9 at the Festival theatre. A set of scandal-mongers turn their attack on the marriage of old Sir Peter Teazle and his young wife, while two brothers contend for the fortune of their rich uncle, Sir Oliver. The play combines intricate and brilliantly funny situations with a savagely realistic treatment of man's hypocrisy and greed. The most enduring comedy in the English language.

Hedda Gabler opens on June 10 at the Festival theatre. In Hedda Gabler, Ibsen has created one of the most fascinating heroines of the stage. The tragic resolution of her passionate inner conflicts is the theme of this masterpiece by the "father of modern drama."

The Friends premieres on July 22 at the Avon theatre. Out of his maturity, one of England's Angry Young Men takes a long look — more in affectionate sorrow — at the changing English social order. In this drama, Wesker gives us a distinguished successor to Chips With Everything, Roots, The Kitchen and so many other.

Vatzlav premieres on August 11 at the Avon theatre. Critics have called Mrozek the dramatic heir of Strindberg, Kierkegaard and Kafka. In this new comedy about power and influence, the author of Tango demonstrates anew why he is Europe's most-performed young playwright.

Marcel Marceau, one of the world's great masters of mime returns for his third visit to the Stratford Festival with a program calculated to delight old and young alike. Opening night — July 6 at the Avon theatre.

The Sun Never Sets will be presented on its opening night of July 2 at the Avon Theatre. Patrick Crean takes a nostalgic, sometimes critical, and always revealing look at the last glory of the British Empire through the eyes of one of its most eminent representatives — Rudyard Kipling.

If you lust for a good blood pudding after 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde', or yearn for caesar salad during 'Cleopatra', THE MYRA BRECKINRIDGE COOKBOOK will spur you to the starry heights. However aroused Lana Turner or Clark Gable leave you, rushing home to cheesecake and beefcake will take the edge off your hunger.

"Eating is like sex, the better it is, the more you want", and you can combine indulgences by simmering Cod Pieces and Breast of Capon, or if W. C. Fields puts you in a liquorish mood — mix up a Chickadee while basting the bird. Dabble in a Rum Omelette or chase up some Fairy Tales as you feast your eyes on the Hollywood Queens in the cookbook.

Some like it hot and some prefer pot and a soupcon of the infamous weed can add the je ne sais quoi to your Sunday joint or Broiled Lobster Hash. Shoestring Spaghetti brings back memories of Charlie Chaplin and Sauerbraten will revive the immortal Marlene.

Take two kooks, (preferably Howard Austen and Beverley Pepper), fold in livid imagination and beat with zany humour, marinate in nostalgia, garnish liberally with famous faces and recipes to match — and your taste will be titillated by the chef d'oevre of THE MYRA BRECKINRIDGE COOKBOOK.

D-day, another anniversary

By TOM DOUGLAS

Ouistreham, France — Courage was measured in yards here on June 6, 1944.

On D-Day, Canadian, British and American troops faced a barrier of 800 yards of flat, sandy beaches, laced with mines, swept by machine gun fire and pockmarked by exploding mortar shells.

This is the Normandy coast, across the English Channel from Great Britain, where Operation Overlord began 26 years ago this week.

More than a quarter century later, just the sight of these beaches is enough to raise the hair on one's neck and start the adrenalin churning.

Recently, this writer walked along parts of the coast and, like something from a Grade B movie, seemed to hear the echoes of gunfire.

The contrast of a sunny afternoon stroll along the beaches exploring the ruins of landing craft half-buried in the sand and walking through the many German bunkers still standing brings home the full impact of the horrors of war.

The French people have not forgotten the sacrifice made by the Allied soldiers, living and dead, who stormed the Normandy beaches.

Cemeteries and shrines are well-kept and are visited every year by thousands of citizens of France, many of whom can be seen saying a small prayer before leaving.

The small resort town of Arromanches has built an excellent museum and diorama theatre where numerous tourists flock each year to gain background information before making their pilgrimages along the beaches.

Plaques have been erected on roadsides, in bunkers and in restaurants and cafes all along the coast, praising the Allied forces for the liberation of France.

Perhaps the feeling of the people of Normandy is best summed up by the words painted on the wall of a cafe here in Ouistreham, a village stormed by British and Canadian troops 26 years ago.

"Welcome British, Canadian and American friends. This is the home of M. and Mme Dupont who very well remember June 6, 1944. God bless you!"

Millions to make sure

Winning the war on pollution

Multi-million dollar government and private pollution control measures are in progress in Oshawa and other parts of the province as the fight for clean air and clean water is beginning to take on serious proportions.

In Oshawa, General Motors recently issued a progress report on its $26.5 million program of air and water purification.

At Queen's Park last week, Energy and Resources Minister Kerr announced a stepped-up pollution control program that will cost Ontario an additional $15 million this year and more in years to follow.

Kerr detailed the program for the legislature where opposition spokesmen complained it didn't go far enough. Liberals called for jail sentences for executives of industries causing pollution and other measures, even stiffer than proposed by Kerr.

In Oshawa, meanwhile, GM said facilities and equipment totalling $4.5 million have already been installed at GM plants here and in St. Catharines and Windsor and that the current program will be continuing without interruption into 1973.

It is believed to be one of the largest programs ever undertaken in Canada for the treatment of waste liquids and stack emissions.

'General Motors of Canada has introduced into its plants over a period of many years a number of measures for dealing with waste materials. They ranged from waste water treatment facilities to new or modified boiler plant stack installations. These earlier programs represented investments of totalling several million dollars," R. S. Withers, President, said.

"In recent years, however, new and changing production techniques in several of our plants have called for the much more intensive purification measures now underway.

The program is off to a good start and its completion date is determined only by the ability of suppliers to produce and deliver the necessary equipment to us.

"The responsibility for clean air and water will not end at any point in time," Withers continued. "The newest changes in production methods will be replaced in years to come by still newer methods — some still unknown — and these methods will undoubtedly call for new techniques of purification. It will be a never-ending challenge."

The largest part of the GM program is taking place at St. Catharines with the installation of new emission control equipment on the melting facilities of the company's foundry. The cost of this program alone exceeds $11 million. A waste treatment plant, and a new separation system which will separate all forms of liquid wastes before their entry into the city's sewage system also are underway. The company's foundry and engine plant built in Grantham Township in 1952 has always had its own sewage disposal system. The system has been enlarged to keep pace with several plant expansions.

At Oshawa GM has completed a number of air and water purification projects in the areas of the power house, paint shop, and component manufacture. Other significant installations are scheduled for water treatment facilities in the passenger car and truck plants.

At Windsor a major waste water treatment facility was completed late last year at a cost of over $1,800,000. This was the first industrial plant so equipped in Windsor.

At GM of Canada's Diesel Division, London, Ontario, more than $300,000 will be spent this year on new and improved air and water pollution control facilities.

Other recent projects of the company outside the current program include the alteration to exhaust systems and installation of dust collectors at the Frigidaire Division in Scarborough and of air emission controls at the Windsor Trim plant. At these plants and at the passenger car assembly plant at Ste. Therese, P.Q., General Motors and the government agencies concerned are conducting joint continuing studies of present and future needs.

Meanwhile, the government program announced by Kerr includes:

*Progressively tighter emission controls for cars and trucks, to be in effect in 1972 and 1973.

*Introduction in July of a waste disposal control plan.

*New regulations controlling emissions from iron foundaries and asphalt mixing plants.

*Research into conversion kits which would allow older cars to meet modern emission standards.

*Regulations this summer to limit the level of sulphur permissible in fuel—now 2.73 per cent—to 1.5 per cent by 1973.

*Subsidies and loans for firms installing pollution control equipment.

*More studies of pollution in cottage and recreational areas.

Patrick Reid (L—Rainy River), his party's pollution critic, called for jail terms for executives of industries causing pollution, and fines of $5,000 a day for industrial polluters.

Reid, said oil tankers should be banned from the Great Lakes, and replaced by oil pipelines.

He called for establishment of an environmental council which would be composed of independent pollution control experts to advise the government on pollution problems.

He said the government has yet to recognize the full extent of air, soil, water and noise pollution.

Reid spoke at the introduction of Kerr's 1970 spending estimates of $92 million.

Kerr, who spoke before Reid said his department was moving ahead in a number of areas.

He said sulphur levels in some grades of fuels now used in the Toronto area are as high as 2.6 per cent. The new regulations, setting a 1.5 per cent limit should be ready some time this summer.

Drastic downtown change if two projects get off coe Street to the Creek, bounded by William Street on the north and John on the south.

The proposed parking garage and the police building are other incentives for developers to consider downtown Oshawa as the site for a project. Depending on how much land is left over after the police building is constructed, Paynter reports he has developers interested in that portion of the Church-Richmond-Simcoe-William Street block.

"I think council is most interested in seeing development go in the downtown area particularly since the lack of federal assistance and the high interest rates mean that the city has to look to private developers to undertake urban renewal," says the urban renewal director.

"We can't afford to be real cautious. We should be real bullish," he advises. "If we make mistakes at first, we'll learn from them."

Paynter feels that existing expropriation legislation is broad enough to permit the city to rely greatly on private development for redeveloping the city's core. Recently, he says, the legislature had broadened expropriation procedures to provide that the owners of expropriated property are adequately compensated.

BURSTING TO GO

"The downtown merchants are just bursting to get going," he emphasizes.

"They feel these office buildings are an absolute necessity."

A citizens' committee on urban renewal meets occasionally when required, and its executive meets more regularly. These committees were established to involve the public actively in urban renewal and to win their support and enthusiasm.

This kind of redevelopment, which has been very successful in cities like Halifax, N.S., is much less costly than if the city undertakes to redevelop primarily by itself. It does, however, mean that the city council has somewhat less control over the precise pattern of development than if it were doing the job itself.

We could spend almost any amount of money improving the central business district, says Paynter — burying overhead wires, installing new street lights and the like. The city is already well-equipped as far as major services go. This year the city will be replacing the original storm sewer which flows through the heart of the city and which was built in 1904. However, this reconstruction is not as a result of any new development, but because the present system is inadequate and not functioning properly and would be replaced regardless.

SIMPLER APPLICATION

If Andras does come out with a new program of federal assistance for urban renewal in the fall, the elaborate application process may be somewhat simplified, the urban renewal director reports. Instead of requiring the city to go through both federal and provincial channels to receive assistance, the province of Ontario has suggested that a lump sum for urban renewal simply be turned over to the provincial government which would administer the program.

A few weeks ago Paynter attended a meeting of the Canadian Association of urban renewal officials. He found that everyone was in a similar position from St. Johns, Nfld., to Calgary. "There is an obvious lack of funds everywhere," he says.

"Our problems in Oshawa are the same problems everyone else has," says Paynter. "except that Oshawa is in a more optimistic position than most cities."

This week with Tom

They've done it on a ferris wheel, underwater and free-falling through space. Why not in prison?

This might be the average reader's reaction to a story out of Toronto awhile back concerning a young couple in love who wanted to get married.

The only obstacle, however, was a long prison sentence that the young man in question was facing. He and his fiancee expressed the hope that the authorities would let them get married in prison.

Such people delight a writer with a long afternoon ahead of him and an imagination that tends to wander. Let's suppose such a wedding were to take place. The coverage of the event in the prison newspaper might go something like this. . . .

. . . . Miss Roxanne Rogers became the bride of Lee Johnson in the Cachot Prison Saturday afternoon with Sam 'The Deacon' Connors performing the ceremony.

The bride was attired in grey denim and carried a bouquet of forget-me-nots. Maid of honor was Ann 'Big Molly' Sullivan and bridesmaids were the girls from the laundry room who chose as their ensemble frocks of white cotton and white tennis shoes.

The groom was dressed in a black-and-white wide pinstripe suit by Solitary Row and his accoutrements included a black ball and chain by the boys in the prison foundry.

Among the guests at the affair were the inmates of Cell Block A including Bill 'Queenie' Graham, a former cellmate of Mr. Johnson. Mr. Graham seemed quite over wrought by the ceremony.

The affair took place in the recreation centre

BUY A TENT

Days of leaky old piece of canvas are over

By Paul Franke

Recent weather to the contrary, summer is just around the corner and hundreds of Oshawa and area families will be hauling out dusty suitcases, travel folders and road maps in preparation for a two, three or four-week vacation.

One of the major headaches facing the average vacationer, however, is the problem of accommodation. Visions of a carefree fun-filled holiday are often clouded by the thought of wearily searching for a motel after a long, hot day on the road.

Coupled with this, the painful remembrance of staggering motel and hotel bills persuade many a would-be traveller to spend his vacation in his back yard, dreaming of all the sights he is missing.

Like so many problems, however, the answer to this one is simple if one stops to reflect upon it. Buy a tent!

Immediately, this will conjure up in some minds the vision of Boy Scout days with a leaky old piece of canvas supported by several swaying poles.

Beneath this shaky structure, the poor youngster shivered as a torrential downpour soaked him and mosquitoes elected him the main course for their nightly banquet.

But if this is all that is keeping the traveller from considering a tenting holiday, then his worries are over. Tents have come a long way in the last 10 years.

The temporary shelter of today is made of very light canvas, double-walled and plastic-floored to keep out moisture and supported by light aluminium poles and pegs.

Normally, the average modern tent takes no longer to assemble than it takes for the weary traveller to unload all his luggage, register at the motel and get things sorted out once he has staggered to his room.

Nor do the directions for putting up the structure read like your son's Grade 7 homework in the new math. A few simple steps is all it takes.

Depending on the number of occupants, a good tent will cost anywhere from $30 to $130. Added to this will be the price of sleeping bags and other camping supplies. In fact, you can have most of the comforts of home if roughing it isn't your idea of an ideal vacation.

If the initial cost seems a little steep, total up your expenses for accommodations on last year's vacation and you will probably find that the equipment could be paid for in one summer.

Gone will be the nerve-wracking search at the end of the day for a 'Vacancy' sign at motels. With provincial parks spaced 200 miles apart across the province, the traveller can chart his trip to reach one at the end of the day.

If more time is needed for sightseeing, there are always privately-run campsites at closer intervals. These areas normally provide all the necessities for a successful vacation: sanitary facilities, drinking water, firewood and friendship.

Nowhere else can one find so many people who are willing to strike up a conversation, join in a happy sing-song or lend a helping hand.

After all, each camper is there under the same circumstances. You're living in an instant city, ready to move on in the morning, so easy friendships are necessary if you're going to have any fun at all.

Vacationing Canadians could take their cue from the people of Europe. Campgrounds are big business overseas. Every good-sized town and city provides facilities close to all tourist attractions.

The sites are filled to capacity every night with fun-loving, friendly campers who have come from every country in Europe. Whether they have arrived by bicycle, motorbike, Volkswagen or Rolls-Royce, they all join together to make their one-night stay as pleasant as possible.

locker room of the prison and was watched on closed-circuit television by members of the prison staff.

Ushers for the wedding were the guards of Cell Block A who were armed with riot shotguns and tear gas grenades. Best man was 'Jewels' Wilson who presented the bride with a five-carat diamond ring strongly resembling one taken in the Malone heist last fall.

Soloist for the affair was Stoolie O'Brien who sings at many prison events. He delivered a stirring rendition of 'If I Had The Wings of An Angel' followed by the hymn 'Rock of Ages'

Just before the ceremony began, a representative of Cell Block A asked Warden Smithers for permission to fire off a 21-gun salute to the married couple. This request was denied.

Following the ceremony, a buffet luncheon was served by the prison kitchen staff under the direction of chief cook Ptomaine Charlie Gallagher. Bicarbonates were supplied by the dispensary.

The happy couple then proceeded to the prison admittance room where front and profile wedding photos were taken.

Prior to leaving on a short honeymoon trip to Cell Block B, the newlyweds were presented with a wallet of brand new $5 bills by the fellows in the prison print shop.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have now taken up residence at Cell 5642, Block A and 1684 Brouwer Street respectively.

Harbor ultimate beneficiary of Oshawa's debris

Smelt, erosion make housekeeping difficult

Housekeeping the Oshawa Harbor is no easy job. Fish and people are constantly making a mess of things.

"Pick up your smelly fish" says Wilfred Gillberry, harbor manager, who, being chief housekeeper, already has his hands full.

The "smelly" smelt are being dropped all over the west pier by eager smelt fishermen who catch more than they want. "These misguided individuals," says Gilberry, "rush down with nets and lanterns and draw from the lake far more fish than they can possibly eat in a year. What do they do with the ones they don't want? They scatter them over the wharf where they are trodden to a stinky, slimy pulp and left to fester in the sun. Is this good sportsmanship?"

Wilfred Gillberry, harbor manager.

Then there are the dead fish carcases which are washed into the harbor from the lake. "These fish" says Gillberry, "stick around all summer and are the cause of a most objectionable odor."

However, it's not pollution the fish die from. When there is a small change in the temperature of the lake, the fish spawn. After they have spawned they die. This is a major reason why these hundreds of dead fish can be seen floating in the harbor in the early summer.

Another problem over which the harbor commission has virtually no control is the polluted water that flows down the Oshawa and Wilson Road creeks.

The harbor commission is the ultimate beneficiary of all the waterborn debris from Oshawa.

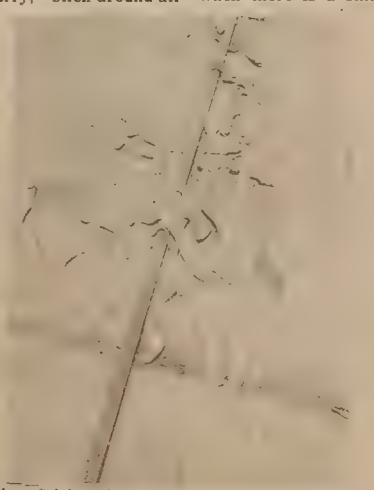
Constant work and money is being spent to clean up this mess and while the water is a great deal cleaner than it was several months ago, there is still tremendous room for improvement.

THE SHORELINE IS RECEEDING

One other major housekeeping problem the harbor commission has to deal with is the mending of the shoreline.

Over the last few years, a combination of rising waters erosion has pushed back the North Eastern shore line at Oshawa Harbor a considerable distance.

The commission is now putting plans in hand to protect the shoreline from eroding further. The reason this is necessary is that, as the shoreline breaks down, the material is washed into the harbor and necessitates further dredging to maintain a depth of 22 feet.



In order to protect the present shoreline, it is necessary to obtain armor stone or large broken pieces of concrete which will break down the force of the waves and reduce the scouring action which is causing the damage.

"We are constantly on the lookout" says Gillberry, "for pieces of broken concrete to complete this project. So if anyone needs a home for some broken concrete, please call the commission."

Three thousand tons of energy fuels — coal, gasoline and oil, and 60 cargo vessels, go through the harbor every year. And just recently, Lasco Steel has been shipping its steel to the United Kingdon from the Oshawa harbor.

Ugh . . . white swirley stuff you see is pollution.

These fish have been left to rot on the pier at Oshawa harbor by smelt fishermen.

YEARS AHEAD IN SPORTS

"For a community of 90,000, Oshawa has sports facilities unequalled in any other place," says Karl Edmunds, sports director for Oshawa's CKLB Radio.

"In fact," says Edmunds, "there is no reason in this town why any young man or woman who is physically and mentally capable should have to rely on any foreign substance for mental or physical stimulation.

"Juvenile delinquency should be at the lowest percentage here," sportscaster Edmunds says.

Edmunds is a relative newcomer to the city. He came to Oshawa from Flinflon, Manitoba, and was deeply impressed with the facilities and sports program available in the city. As sports director for the radio station he was in a position to become familiar with what is happening in sports and what is available. Edmunds himself took on the coaching of a juvenile hockey team.

The civic auditorium is the most modern, up-to-date recreation complex you'd find anywhere, he says. It serves all age groups. There are facilities for middle-aged people. There's something for everybody, says Edmunds. At present the third phase of the auditorium complex is under construction, with a completion date slated for September.

"When it's completed it is going to be a regional recreation facility serving people from Pickering to Bowmanville," says Edmunds. "There's nothing similar anywhere in Canada, except perhaps in Winnipeg and Halifax. The facilities in these two cities were built for international competitions and heavily subsidized by the provincial government. "Oshawa should be proud that the citizens built the civic auditorium through public subscription," he says.

This commitment to sports which is symbolized by the civic auditorium complex goes through the community, the sports director says. The high schools have excellent facilities and they are being used by the whole community in the community use of schools programs. High school gyms are well-equipped, he says, and there are gymnasiums even in a number of the elementary schools.

When the third phase of the auditorium is completed, within a two-and-a-half block radius, you'll be able to find swimming, hockey, track and field, fastball, rugger, soccer, all in one complex.

There is an elaborate neighborhood parks association which provides the organization for junior hockey and lacrosse and many other sports. On top of this, there are also church leagues and other special leagues.

START AT SIX

Both organized lacrosse and organized hockey start as young as six years of age. They're called mini-tykes. There are a number of intermediate stages until a youth is adept enough to play for the Oshawa Green Gaels, the champion Junior "A" lacrosse team, or in hockey, the Oshawa Generals. Lacrosse even goes a step further with the Brooklin Redmen, the senior lacrosse team. Many men have organized hockey leagues for themselves at the places where they work and rent ice time to participate in hockey as a recreational sport.

Minor soccer is also organized and baseball is undergoing a revival among the young people of the community. Edmunds reports, although there are a number of men's leagues which are carry-overs from the post war period when baseball and fastball were very popular in Oshawa.

From the physical training point of view, the city has almost everything a youngster could want, he says.

"If parents are socially inclined and truly thinking of themselves and their young ones," says the sports director, "then they can find three hours a week to spend with them in sports activity.

"If a youngster can do anything, and if he's able to get along in group activity, he can develop a lot of basic skills through an organized sports program."

Edmunds feels that this kind of organization helps a child to know his place in society. "It all falls back on the parents," he says. "Most kids don't want to become part of an indigent society, but it's up to the parents to enroll them in a sports program."

DADS STAY ON

Minor sport in the city is basically in the hands of men and women who have, have had or will have youngsters playing a particular sport. Many of them stay active in the organization long after their children have grown up. Edmunds points out that there is a surprising number of single people who are active in minor hockey and feels that this is a good sign in the community.

"One of the greatest human faults of an adult male frustrated athlete is that he forgets that he also was a youngster and looked like an ugly duckling," says Edmunds. "Many people forget that these youngsters haven't the physical reflexes that an adult has and that they must learn many of the techniques of the sport they are playing by trial and error.

"Patience with young will pay fantastic dividends in the end," he says, pointing out that the adults who coach and train these youngsters are continually learning from them. And the results when you show one youngster just one trick, one good solid lesson, are fantastic.

Sports for youngsters does have its problems . . . parents.

Too often parents just come and dump their child at the rink and leave, or they may come back towards the end of the game and then criticize the coach for not using his child on the ice enough, he says.

The parent should be willing to stay and watch throughout the game. Since minor sports is for the children's enjoyment and development, Edmunds feels that parents who push their children to succeed to be the best players on a team are almost defeating the purpose of the exercise. Minor hockey, for example, is supposed to be a recreational outlet for children where they learn to get along in the group and also acquire a basic knowledge and enjoyment of the sport.

It is difficult to restrict your time once a person gets involved in a minor sports association, Edmunds says from experience. Although you may only spend three hours a week actually on the ice with the team, many more hours are spent thinking about it, and talking to the youngsters.

"There's not a youngster born who can't teach an adult something," says Edmunds, "and if the adult can't learn, he doesn't belong in minor sports.

"SMALL TOWN FEELING"

"A youngster taking part in sports in a community the size of Oshawa can still have that small town feeling," he says. "There are no exhausting cross-city bus rides to get to the arena as is the case in a big city, yet there are still the advantages of the big city because it's right next door."

Sports director Edmunds feels that a great many western communities "are really missing the boat by not tyring to establish facilities within their urban boundaries to keep their youngsters busy.

"There has to be more organized activity now because a youngster doesn't have to get up at 6 a.m. to make his lunch and bring in the coal or the wood. He doesn't have to shovel 15 sidewalks to make money for the show on Saturday. Today's youngster doesn't have to work part time," says Edmunds. "Therefore, they all have more leisure time."

The sports director sees a corresponding relaxation in parental discipline since the children don't have the responsibilities they used to have. "The parents also have lots of time and want to go their own way in line with what their interests are. Then the youngster is left with nothing to do."

Edmunds feels that a proper recreation program will develop adults who are better citizens and physically in better shape. A physical recreation program will instill in a child good attitudes towards physical health which will carry over into adult life, he suggests.

PHYSICALLY BETTER

"This means that we will have physically a better community," he says. "If they don't get physical educations leadership when they are young they are going to have problems when they grow up because of the amount of leisure time they will have."

Edmunds recommends that a child become oriented towards putting in a serious scholastic effort between nine and four o'clock at school and in his spare time become involved in some physical activity. "The mind has to have something to keep it busy or else the youngster will have no alternative but to grow his hair long, play a guitar and get four feet high on the weekends," he says.

Schools play a big part in encouraging the youngsters to develop a healthy and appropriate attitude towards physical education. The only problem, says Edmunds, is that there are not enough fully trained physical education people around.

Today's schools have excellent equipment for gymnastics for example, the sports director points out. The gymnast, he says, is a true athlete who must have a great power of concentration to perform his sport to the best of his ability. Gymnasts are probably good students and require great self-discipline, suggests Edmunds. Gymnastics is not a generally popular sport "because it is too tough, and not free-wheeling enough for most people."

Golf and curling are becoming more and more popular. Both are excellent games for adults, he says, although golf can be an expensive hobby. There are seven golf courses within a half hour's drive of the city. "It's an excellent sport for those who think they're over the hill," says Edmunds, "and for those who need an excuse to get outside."

How Dave Henry turned a story idea into a million dollar business

At 39, Dave Henry has a typical Oshawa business success story to tell.

Just 10 years ago Henry incorporated Tropicana Swimming Pools for the specific purpose of selling two swimming pools to two particular individuals who had indicated the were going to install swimming pools that summer.

Today he is president of Major Pools, Canada's largest manufacturer of package pools.

In all started in 1959, when Henry read a Financial Post article suggesting that swimming pools was the business to get into in the '60s. At that time he was operating a plumbing and heating wholesale dealership in the city.

When he heard that these two professional people wished to purchase pools, Henry felt he should be the one to sell them, then he'd go back to his plumbing business. So he set up a little place — only 500 square feet with one employee — on Kent Street in Whitby.

Henry didn't make the two sales he was after, but he did sell six all-steel construction pools to private homes and motels as far away as Stratford and Sault Ste. Marie. The parts were purchased from American manufacturers and assembled in Canada. There is a 10-year guarantee on the all-steel pools, he says.

"This was the only kind of pool that could adapt itself to the climate without cracking," says Henry. The pool manufacturer came to this conclusion because he had a concrete pool which had cracked due to the extreme variations in Canadian weather.

He saw no point in selling an inferior product and strongly believes that his all-steel, vinyl-lined pool is second to none in wearability.

In 1961, Henry decided to carry on installing pools and designed a prefabricated steel-wall pool similar to the all-steel ones which were on the market. This prefabricated model, however, had advantages in easy assembly, and eliminated much time, labor and maintenance since, with the vinyl liner, it required no painting. The panels for these pools were manufactured in Toronto, while the corner sections, filter tanks, and other parts were imported from the United States.

SELLS 12

Henry was seriously involved in the pool business by 1962 when he decided the only way to expand was to go into manufacturing and assembly in large quantities. This would have to be done in large enough quantities to sell the pools at a reasonably low cost and sell them through a nation-wide distribution and dealership organization. That year he sold 12 pools.

Business doubled the following year when Tropicana Pools moved into 196 Valencia Ave. To proceed with expansion, and set up Major Pools as the company to manufacture the pools, Henry required a capital investment of $20,000. Until then, Tropicana Pools had been strictly a family business. To raise the necessary capital, Henry arranged with two outsiders to put up $10,000, to match the $10,000 he and his father could invest. But then the other two decided not to come in and the two Henry's had to raise the money themselves.

This year of decision saw Henry start to manufacture his own corner pieces for the pools and the opening up of a limited number of dealerships. He continued to have material brought in from the States. That year they made shipments as far west as Vancouver and east to Montreal and Ottawa.

Sales doubled again in 1964 and the next year the business expanded its operations. This time it was the purchase of a 100 foot lot on Drake Street in the Farewell Industrial Park. A vinyl plant was erected on this site and Major Pools began to manufacture its own vinyl liners in January 1965. That year they expanded sales to the east coast.

TRADE MISSION

Dave Henry found 1965 a notable year for another reason. That fall he was part of an Ontario trade mission which toured Europe. This gave the founder of Major Pools an opportunity to assess the European market and establish contacts there in preparation for entry in to the European market.

Oshawa-built swim pools are going to South Africa, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Finland, Norway, Sweden, England, Kuwait, Tahiti, Barbados, Jamaica, Grenada, Australia and even farther away

"There was not enough business in Canada to maintain a proper-sized factory," he says. The same year they added 5,300 square feet of storage space to the Drake Street building, almost doubling its size.

The company started selling in the United States in 1966 and established a distribution centre there. "It wasn't difficult to break into that market," says Henry, "because the vinyl-lined pool was the accepted model and most common.

"The only problem was that the demand was too large for us to supply the requirements," he says. The demands of the American market required a large inventory that his company couldn't afford at that time.

Business doubled again and Major Pools leased a small property from its neighbor on Drake Street. By the fall of 1967, Major Pools purchased the present property on Raleigh Street in the Industrial Park and established a large press operation where they could manufacture their own steel tanks for the filters.

This was the year Major Pools opened up Australia. Henry spent three weeks in Sidney setting up operations. There were a number of busy pool distributors in Australia, he says, but none could match the quality of his product. "We had all the market we required to work with." Henry found that the pools could be shipped to Australia for about the same cost as shipment to the west coast. The export market expanded again in 1968, and again the facilities were increased.

"Because of the necessary expansion it was obvious that we were going to need substantial money," says Henry. He was approached by a Toronto financial house and sold the business to International Bond and Equity. But he stayed on as President of Major Pools and is now busier than ever. A massive addition — 22,000 square feet — to the existing plant is now in operation and plans for further expansion of the building in 1972 are on the drawing board. When the new plant is completely stocked, 17,000 filters, 1,000 above ground tanks and 800 inground pools will be on hand at all times. The inventory is in excess of $1 million.

Going at full speed, with all the materials on hand, a completely packaged pool can be turned out in half an hour, says Henry, pointing proudly to his efficient machines which have cut production time to a minimum. Much of his technical know-how was acquired when Major Pools had manufacturing agreements with an American company. When these agreements expired, Henry was able to design his own equipment and dies.

With only one further addition necessary to equip the Oshawa plant for the Canadian-U.S. market, plans are being laid for plants in Australia, England and Europe.

The foreign market is really opening up for Major Pools this year. The portable pools — packaged in compact containers — are being sent to South Africa, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Finaind, Norway, Sweden, England, Kuwait, Tahiti, Barbados, Jamaica, and Grenada as well as Australia and the United States.

EXPORT BY COMPUTER

By the end of this season, says Henry, computers will handle the seasonal adjustment of the inventory and make adjustments for the export market. Presently, Major Pools employs 70 men and women during the busy Canadian season and 40 in the off-season. This fall and winter they will be branching out into other areas of manufacture to keep the production going all year round, and which can be handled by the dealers and distributors in the off-season. In only 10 years, Major Pools has become one of the five largest manufacturers of pools in the world. All the others are in the United States, says Henry.

Major Pools has the largest variety of stock sizes of any manufacturer on the market — 16 — with at least two variations for each size. Prices start at a new low of $1095 for a packaged pool 22 by 36.5 feet with a depth of 7.5 feet. Extras such as a vacuum kit, ladder, diving board, automatic chlorinator, bring the cost to $1693.50. Installation costs can double the expense of the pool, but Henry says that a lot of people install the pools themselves, with the assistance of a detailed instruction manual and the advice of the dealer.

Niagara steel and vinyl pool kits consist of galvanized steel walls and corner sections, filter, wall skimmer, snap-in lock liner, inlet and outlet fittings. All Niagara pools are guaranteed for 10 years, but the galvanized steel which is the basic feature of construction, has been shown to withstand corrosion, water pressure, salts and the freeze-and-thaw process for upwards of 70 years.

Service and quality are the keynotes of Major Pools product. We can service any pool anywhere in the world in seven days, says Henry, except South Africa where service may take a month. If something goes wrong with a filter, this office is open 12 months of the year and someone is always here.

GUARANTEES

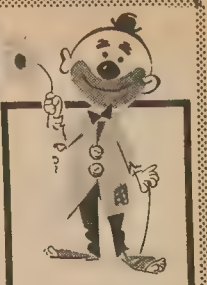
"Today, there are a lot of people in the pool business who misrepresent their products and give fantastic guarantees because they won't be around to honor them," he says, citing the example of one pool company which has gone bankrupt three times and come back with an even more impressive guarantee each time.

"All we can do is ask the prospective purchaser to check into the financial background of the company before putting too much stock into the guarantee," says the President of Major Pools.

Locally, Tropicana Pools still distributes pools in Oshawa. Three other people are assigned to handle complaints about pools not only in Canada, but all over the world. "We have one of the best service networks in the entire industry," says Henry.

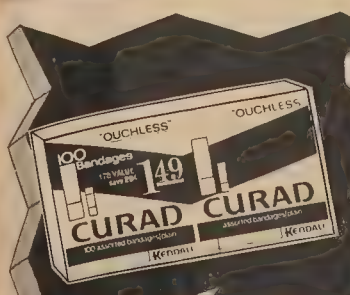
Although word of mouth is still the best advertisement for Major Pools, the company has an international advertising budget of $100,000 yearly.

Henry sees no let-up in the increased demand for swimming pools. A management study produced by Stevenson-Kellogg plans a 25 percent growth each year for the next four years.



Pools are no longer restricted to the professional and business class, says Henry. The factory workers are starting to buy them, he says, rather than a cottage. It's a relief to have the pool in the back yard rather than face the crowded highways on weekends.

"With increased leisure time pools are becoming more important, he says. "It's also a good method of keeping the children at home."



Henry himself is married and has four handsome active boys.

Kiddies' column

There is a llama named George
Who lives in a zoo nearby
"Oh me!" said George one day
"I'm so sad that I could cry."

"But why?" asked George's sweetheart
Who was very, very wise
"It's because I'm so funny looking"
Said George with tears in his eyes.

"My neck is long and shaggy
My legs are short and fat
My face is rather peculiar
And there's even more than that . . .

"All the other animals
Laugh at funny me
And say they're prettier looking Than I will ever be."

"My love," said George's sweetheart
Who wiped the tears from his eyes
"Those animals think they're clever
But there is something they don't realize.

"They say you're funny looking
And call you terrible names
But you're way ahead of them
In all their silly games.

"Happiness grows in the heart
That is tender with love and care
But their hearts are so hard and cold
That nothing will ever grow there.

"Dear George, my love, my sweetheart
You have a heart that is kind
And you are luckier than anyone
Because happiness you will find.

FRANCINE FORTIER

P.S. George lives at the Bowmanville Zoo.

ANNUAL MEETING
ONTARIO COUNTY TUBERCULOSIS AND RESPIRATORY DISEASE ASSOCIATION will be held in the Lower Hall, Northminster United Church
Simcoe Street, North, Oshawa

SPEAKER: DR. C.C. GRAY,
EXECUTIVE MEDICAL DIRECTOR
ONTARIO THORACIC SOCIETY

8:00 P.M. TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1970

The financial report will be received, the election of the Executive Council, and other such business as may properly come before the meeting

Any interested persons are cordially invited to attend.

THE GOLF CHALLENGE

Golf, he says, has become the ultimate individual challenge for everyone over 25. Everyone watches golf on television and feels that he too should be able to do what these professionals are doing, the sports director explains.

Edmunds says that it will cost the golfer between $200 and $250 annually to play golf, and half of that cost goes towards fees to join a club. "This is probably what keeps golf as something of a cliquey sport."

Curling doesn't have the same glamor as golf but its adherents are definitely enthusiastic and committed.

Edmunds also promotes swimming as the excellent sport for people of all ages. There are three indoor public pools in Oshawa and several outdoor pools that are operated in the summer. The problem with building swimming pools is the cost and the fact that they can be used only for one purpose. "You can't run a bingo in the centennial pool," says Edmunds, but you can use the arena for other things besides hockey. Also, swimming isn't usually regarded as a spectator sport.

Skiing is also a popular sport and there several ski clubs within an easy drive from the city as well as a number of private hills. Lessons for children can be obtained at minimal cost in special classes. "Skiing is a fantastic adventure sport for those who are left out of other things," says sportsman Edmunds, "and skiing can be successfully combined with other winter sports." The only problem with skiing in southern Ontario is that the season isn't long enough for the hard-core enthusiasts.

"The outlook for sport in Oshawa is brighter than for any community of comparable size," he says. "Oshawa is five to ten years ahead of every other community.

"In general, there's organization right up through and including the middle age group and over. If you can't take part in sports, there are a thousand things you can go and watch."

Despite the present economic slump, industrial commissioner Robert Nicol predicts an excellent growth record for Oshawa this year.

Nicol says that before the year's end, almost $14 million in building permits for industrial and commercial projects will be issued if projects on the books go forward as scheduled.

Under construction already is a new Holiday Inn, and next on the list are two new high-rise office buildings, an industrial plaza and new shopping centres.

This compares to $5.1 million worth of building permits issued in 1969 and $3.6 million in 1968.

THE KEY: EVERYONE

The key to success in capturing new industry and commercial development, says Nicol, who has been industrial commissioner since Sept., 1968, is to get everyone to sell Oshawa. Everyone means residents and businessmen who are travelling in other countries, Canadian embassies and trade missions, and foreign branches of Canadian banks. This means setting up an elaborate system to provide regular information about Oshawa and its assets to the people who are in a position to help direct new business our way.

It also means that once a contact is made with an industry which is planning a move or expansion,

Your own house - but how ?

By Francine Fortier

A piece of land with a house on it.

Not an unusual dream — but a dream that is becoming harder to realize.

Take a look at the homes and land situation in Oshawa. What was it like 16 years ago? How does our present situation compare? What does the future hold?

Two experts have come up with interesting information. E. G. Girling, manager of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, discusses the housing question and G. A. Wandless, Planning Director for the City of Oshawa states the land dilemma.

"Statistics going back to 1954" says Girling, "show that the national average cost of a single detached dwelling was $12,418 including land at $1,687. By comparison the national average in 1969 was $21,860 including land at $4,201.

"Houses were, of course, available at lower cost than the national average, both in 1954 and 1969, but the above figures only indicate the increases on an average basis over the past 16 years.

Again, referring to national statistics, the average bungalow in 1954 contained 1,102 square feet, whereas in 1969 the size had increased to 1,179. Generally speaking this change resulted from a desire on the part of owners and purchasers for more spacious units and in part from zoning by municipalities for tax purposes.

INCREASE

Cost increases, says Girling, over the 16 years can be attributed to rising land, labor and material prices, and demand from the purchasing public for larger houses, with extras such as built-in washers, dryers, stoves and ovens, etc.

1960 statistics show the national average income of borrowers under the National Housing Act was $5,620. Eighty-three per cent of the purchasers were in the income range $4,000 to $8,000. In 1969 the national average had increased to $9,385 and 75 per cent were in the income range $5,000 to $11,000.

GM expects 25,000 at its open house

Next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 15, 16 and 17 thousands of Oshawa district residents will visit the huge General Motors South Plant on Park Road. It will be the first time that so large a segment of the public has been invited to inspect GM's South Plant operations. Monday is set aside as a preview day for GM employees, their families and friends. The doors open at 1:15 p.m. and 6:15 daily.

The Open House is being held to give visitors a first-hand idea not only of how General Motors builds cars, but what General Motors means to Nicol follows up in traditional salesman fashion and keeps reminders of Oshawa pouring in.

Then, when they do make plans to construct a new plant, they will know all about the advantages of Oshawa.

Nicol sees the current economic slump as temporary and a time for preparation.

"The whole North American continent is in an economic slump brought about by certain government programs, to cool out the dollar," he says, "in order that a dollar's purchasing power will give us a dollar's worth rather than 60 cents worth, to cut inflation. This doesn't mean that industries aren't expanding business," says the industrial commissioner, noting that there are more and more inquiries regarding this area. "Business realizes that this is only a short term recession."

"A cooling out period every once in a while is better than a full-scale depression like they had in the 1930s," says Nicol.

"It brings everybody back to proper perspective and provides a chance for the economy of the nation to realign itself." The industrial commissioner predicts that the economy will pull itself out of the slump towards the middle of the third-quarter of the year. But now is a time for planning for the business expansion which will follow in the city of Oshawa, he says. We are now trying to cultivate new commercial and industrial developments in the area.

"We must adopt the boy scout motto 'be prepared'," advocates Nicol. "We're gearing ourselves to be prepared for the 70s."

THE PLAN

The business and industrial commission has a pet project to prepare Oshawa for the future. The commission is on the verge of appointing some body of planners to undertake an Oshawa industrial development plan, embracing the entire area south of the Macdonald Cartier Freeway and by both city boundaries. Last fall the commission contracted M. M. Dillon Co. Ltd. to prepare a feasibility study as to how the study should actually be conducted. They brought back a system for undertaking the study, "a work program network" which proposes eight stages for final acceptance of the scheme. The commission awarded the work to the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board which will do the job at cost.

The first stage will be information-collecting from numerous sources, including the conservation authority, the public utilities commission, government boards and agencies, private enterprise, and information about physical and geographical features, hydraulic information, assessment information, traffic and roads information, municipal servicing, waterways and lake traffic.

Information from these sources will then be channeled to the various study phases of the report — land use, transportation, municipal services, financial, utilities, hydraulic and development.

Then the preliminary studies will be reviewed by all interested parties and at the next stage their comments will be incorporated into the preliminary studies. A series of final reviews and approvals follow until the final draft of the study is approved and the study printed.

"This is a massive study," says Nicol, "and it should have been done a long time ago. This will give us a nice neat package for sales. We'll be able to give all the information. We'll have it at hand, instead of going at industrial development on a piecemeal basis."

The development scheme for the entire industrial area will be similar to the one prepared for Marathon Developments who had planned to build an industrial park on the Norman Down Farm. And Marathon "isn't dead yet", says the industrial commissioner.

"We have pretty viable products to sell," he says. We bought Camp X to make it attractive for developers to come in.

This isn't a Fuller Brush operation

Land prices in Toronto are controlled by a few speculative groups who are doing a lot of harm in Toronto by inflating land prices, he says. By owning two or three large parcels of land, the city can help to keep land prices in Oshawa stable and reasonable. Speculators won't be able to inflate the price of land when serviced city land is selling at reasonable prices.

Oshawa has a sound industrial and commercial basis. "For the last 70 years the city has grown up around General Motors," says Commissioner Nicol. "General Motors is a good corporate citizen, but we can no longer depend on GM as the principal industry. We've got to have diversification and we need more industrial assessment to offset the growing residential population."

Nicol feels the coming regional government will need a strong assessment base regardless of the final boundaries and the only way is for Oshawa to develop a good industrial and commercial base. Of course, Oshawa has lots of land along the waterfront, close to highway 401 and two railways, one with major marshalling yards.

There is an air-freight type airport, which can be enlarged and the possibility of a deep sea harbor is the Second Marsh approved as a future harbor site last week. And Oshawa is close to Toronto. This is both an advantage and a disadvantage.

European and American firms know Toronto because it has a strong international reputation, but they don't particularly know Oshawa, Nicol points out. In advertising Oshawa, our relationships with Toronto have to be strong, he says. But the land prices in Toronto are forcing industry and commerce to come east, he says. Note what is happening in Pickering.

INCENTIVES

The provincial government can help the flow of industrial development eastward by giving industrial incentives, says Nicol.

Oshawa has a lot to offer on its own. In fact, says the industrial commissioner, development experts have told him that Oshawa is the key to the development of this area. With the harbor, the airport, and the other attractive features of the city, there is cheap serviced land and Oshawa has the financial strength to develop its industrial areas far more than any municipality between Metro and Oshawa. Oshawa has many first class social amenities, too, which are lacking in other communities, he says.

There are the Civic Auditorium and other arenas and recreation facilities, the excellent library, the art gallery, Durham College, parks, a good school system, a major hospital, clinics, and it's close to Toronto and all the cultural outlets that city has to offer.

"We're with the crowd, but not in it," says Nicol. Oshawa still has that quiet atmosphere so lacking in Toronto.

And if you draw a circle with a 500 mile radius with the centre in Oshawa, he says, you get a market of 100 million people taking in New York City, Chicago and everything in between.

The Oshawa-centred regional government will be in even a better position to attract industry if the new international airport is located east of Toronto, the industrial commissioner says. Putting the existing one west of Toronto stimulated most of the westward growth of business and industry.

TURN TO ADVANTAGE

Large development firms from Europe are looking in this area, says Nicol because it offers so much development possibility. "If being close to Toronto is a disadvantage," he says, "we'll have to turn it into an advantage."

Nicol is in charge of commercial and industrial development. He assumed this office to fulfill the vacancy left by former commissioner Jim Williams after retiring from city council after almost two years as a controller. Even as a controller, and then a member of the industrial commission, Nicol was trying to sell the city. It was at his insistence that board of control first agreed to raise the annual operating budget of the industrial commissioner from $29,000 in 1967 to $60,000 in 1968. The additional revenue would allow the development department to engage in a much more effective program of advertising and promotion. Controller Nicol also encouraged the city council to undertake a servicing program in the Farewell Industrial Park. By pre-servicing the industrial land, opening up roads, installing sewer and water mains, the city has much more to offer a potential developer. He has a lot less to do to get ready for construction if the services are readily available.

And the city has to be competitive, says Nicol. All other cities have industrial commissioners trying to capture as much of the industrial and commercial growth as possible. All sorts of projects come through his office — from plans for a new office tower to a shopping mall to an industrial plaza to an abandoned factory, and even hotels.

Aside from the lakefront industrial land, Nicol would also like to see light industry located around the airport. This industry should be airport-oriented, he says, but we really can't do anything about selling this land until it is serviced. Present plans show that it can be serviced when the Corbetts Creek Sewage Treatment Plant is constructed. The Procter Redfern Report on the airport suggests that it be developed into an executive airport with conference facilities for visiting executives.

BE POSITIVE

"Everyone has got to take a positive approach, talk positively," he says. In fact, Nicol encourages all Oshawa people to turn into spies for the city. If anyone hears of any industry or company that is thinking of building anywhere in his travels, we would like to know, he says. "Just drop us the name and address of the company in the mail," he suggests. If we get tips like these we can follow them up and sell the city.

"Everyone's got to be a salesman," urges Nicol, who suggests that businessmen who travel to other

EDUCATION IN THE 70's

Devotion to the individual student is the basis

In the schools today, both teachers and students have to work harder, says Ken Munroe, deputy administrator of the Ontario County board of education.

"Both teachers and students have to enjoy what they are doing," says Munroe.

"I do not find the schools as I observe them as drab and uninteresting as some students would like to portray them" he says.

Schools were fairly regimented when he was a student, and quite unexciting. "When I went to school," says Munroe, "a big thrill used to be to get out early two or three times a year to watch a basketball game or to go to the auditorium for a special film once a year.

"Today it is a tendency of the students with their sophisticated technology and the impact of communications to think of things being pretty drab in school without two or three special events happening a day." Munro says that it is impossible for a teacher or the group of teachers to come up with one of these exciting things every day.

"You have to eat plain meals as well as gourmet dinners," he says. "But there is an increasing reluctance to take plain fare.

"The result is that considerable increased pressure is placed on the staff to make things more interesting, to be more innovative, to spend more time planning how to create a stimulating learning experience for the children."

This type of teaching widens the distinction between good and outstanding teachers.

These demands also mean that teachers have to be even more dedicated, and that they have to work even harder to do an adequate job. "They have more professional responsibility now than they've ever had," says the deputy administrator.

When the course of study was prescribed for all schools in Ontario by the provincial department of education, and when that department sent around inspectors at frequent intervals to make sure the teacher was sticking to the material prescribed, and when the results of the students were easily assessed by heavy reliance on tests and examinations, there was not much opportunity for teachers not to do an acceptable type of work.

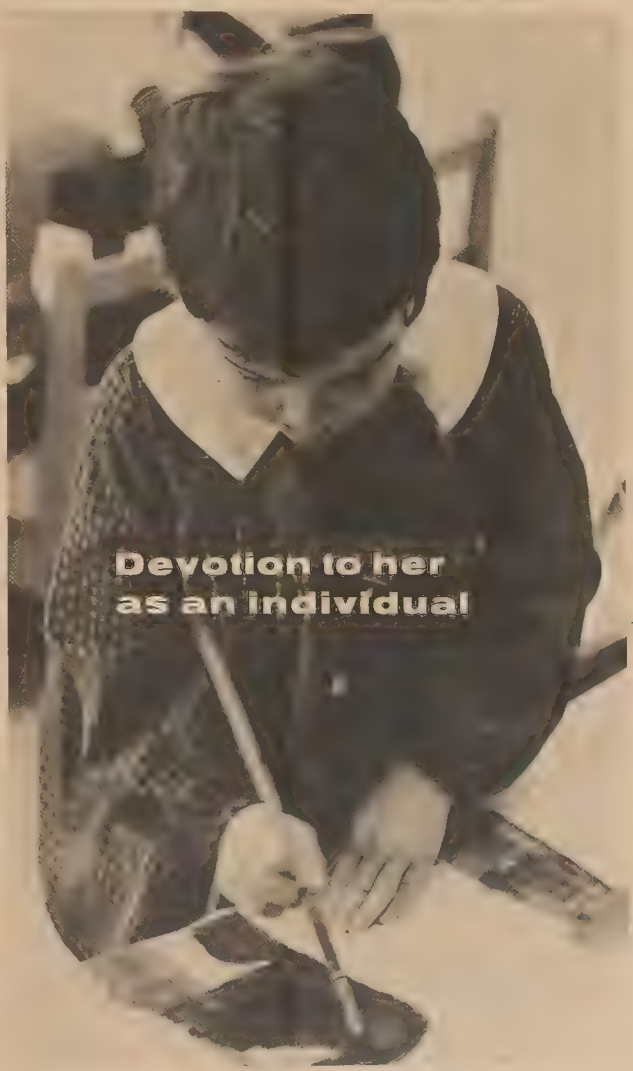
"The new emphasis puts both teacher and student in a tougher position," says Munroe.

HIGH QUALITY

Why is the Ontario county board of education noted for offering high quality education?

We have excellent staff resources in terms of qualifications and experience. There is a marked interest in and aptitude for teaching, he says. Some of our teachers are pretty outstanding people.

"Secondly, our staff and the parents together are pretty deeply committed to the concept of devotion to the individual student, and are going to plan for him."



And thirdly, he says, there is an increase in awareness of the school principal and his staff that the school is a vital link in the community life as well as the home. A school is just not "that building down the street" where children enter for so many hours each day and then emerge to return to their normal lives.

Rather, a school should have a community purpose and identity, Munroe urges. "Schools seem to be getting themselves a new individuality," he says.

"I like to think that the staff, students and parents put their own stamp of community identity on the school. And we're going to find an increase in the differences between schools even if they're only three blocks apart."

These differences will reflect the differences in the neighborhoods, for that give a school its identity, not the things that are alike.

Elementary schools will show this individuality by varying emphasis in types of reading programs, history, geography and so on. The secondary schools will offer different sets of options. Some perhaps will have increased student participation in certain options. Munroe points to the Eastdale Collegiate band which involves music students, the music teacher, surely the people who live in the Ritson Rd. South area are different from those who live in Beau Valley and from those who live in the Lake Vista area and from those who live near the McLaughlin Collegiate and those who live over around Eastdale.

LOCAL SCHOOLS

"This is a good thing because it puts the responsibility for development programs for the students almost completely in the hands of the local school and the parents. This means that parents will be able to determine in each school what kind of education the children receive and where the emphasis in the study program is placed.

Of course the schools will have many common elements because most parents have the same common goals for their children, says deputy administrator Munroe, but it's the differences other staff members, the parents and other students.

Coincident with the changes in the individual schools has been the encouragement from the administration.

There has been an increase of administrative motivation for the schools to evaluate what they are doing and to plan for new emphasis, he says. The administration gives positive encouragement to staff personnel who want to embark on new programs. Administrative vetoes are exceptionally rare when teachers and parents propose a program.

There is dialogue and discussion between administration and the teaching personnel to develop the best program possible because the administration does want to make sure that the school and the teacher are well prepared to cope with the new program. Teachers have to be well-prepared to start something new and don't just jump into a program because it is new or some other teacher is having good success with it.

FILM LIBRARY

Since the Ontario Municipal Board and the Department of Education have put a freeze on the board's building program for this year while the proposals are reviewed, emphasis is being placed on improving the quality of education and the number of services offered.

A major feature of this year's $35 million budget is the establishment of a county film library which will service all elementary separate and secondary school teachers and students in the county. Over 3,000 teachers will use this library, says Munroe.

Two psychologists will be added to the staff to provide a consultative service for the staff and parents. Special education programs will be extended by addition to the speech classes and the hiring of more speech teachers. Two assessment teachers who do diagnostic testing will also join the staff to help the teachers and parents to better diagnose a student's problem.

A first for the board is the offering of winter courses in guidance and music. This program will be administered by officials of the board, and will offer certification in the subjects equivalent to that offered at the summer courses offered by the department of education. Munroe anticipates that 200 teachers will participate.

Educational television and film productions are in development, he reports.

SPECIAL COURSES

The board is also planning extensive courses for principals and vice-principals as part of staff development projects.

Three exciting guidance projects are also being developed at Lake Vista school in Oshawa, Sunderland Public School and in Uxbridge. These pilot projects will attempt to provide extended counselling service for stuents, and parents. There has been a change of emphasis in guidance to the individual student and his family. It used to be a group activity where the students were told what to do if they wanted to be nurses, policemen or teachers. Now the counselling service will help both student and parent determine what kind of emphasis he should place in his education and how to get more out of school.

Six teachers in conversational French will also be added to the elementary school system so that all grade eight's and some grade seven's will have the opportunity to take conversational French before starting high school. This will be the first time conversational French will be taught in Oshawa public schools, although some schools in Ontario county have the program and French is being taught in some of the Separate Schools.

Although the building program for this year is stalled, Munroe reports that 33 new classrooms will be added to the system in September with the completion of the Chaleur Avenue Public School and the Central Park Senior Public School, part of the 1969 building program. However, Munroe expects

We can do it again!

Oshawa is in for a lot of muscle building and fast action.

Terry Kelly, chairman of the committee preparing Oshawa for the Canada Summer Games 1973 bid, plans to make Oshawa swing with plenty of sports action in the next few weeks. Let's all get behind him.

Tomorrow, Kelly and Mayor Bruce Mackey are going to Halifax where last year's Canada Summer Games were held. They hope to glean some ideas from last year's stomping grounds and will be attending a conference of mayors and reeves.

On Friday, both will meet with Mayor Jean Drapeau and Gerry Snider, the mayor's executive assistant, in Montreal.

Bids for the Canada Summer Games must be in by July 15. Mackey will make the actual presentation, which Kelly and his committee have prepared, to the Canada Amateur Sports Federation.

Oshawa has a good chance of winning the bid, says the mayor, because Hunnius, president of the Canadian Amateur Sports Federation, is looking for a "smaller" city.

Oshawa already has an official size Olympic swimming pool, auditorium, Phase Three of the Civic Auditorium complex, and a good athletic record.

If the Games come to Oshawa, however, further facilities will be necessary, such as eight all-weather tennis courts, swimming, diving and water polo equipment and renovations in track and field, soccer, baseball and handball facilities.

The first summer Games in Canada were initiated in 1969 and the first winter Games were held in Quebec City in 1967.

The idea of these Games is to create a national interest; to create an impetus to sports in the community in which the Games are held; for the construction of new sports facilities; and the renovation of existing facilities. At the same time, the government is prepared to commit to a municipality in which the games will be held $350,000 for facilities and renovations.

Some of the cities Oshawa will be up against in the bidding include London, Kitchener, Waterloo and Hamilton.

Kelly's choice as committee chairman is an obvious one. If anyone in Oshawa has shown himself capable of pulling off a "miracle" it is the dapper lawyer.

Mayor Mackey says he chose Kelly because of his "natural leadership ability and achievements; because of his keen interest in youth; and because he has great capabilities of getting the job done and building a successful committee."

Kelly founded the Oshawa and District Soccer Association in 1954; was secretary of the Association from 1954-1959; and from 1963-1967 acted as president. Kelly was a former active player and president of Oshawa Vikings Rugger Club, a member of the Oshawa Golf Club, Oshawa Curling Club and president of the National Lacrosse Association in 1968. He acted as finance chairman of the Oshawa Civic Auditorium, the Centennial Pool Project, Phase Three of the Civic Auditorium, and campaign chairman of the Oshawa Community Chest from 1967-69. Kelly was founding director of Oshawa Green Gaels Lacrosse Club; president of the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal, 1970; was voted young man of the year in Ontario in 1968; and was recipient of an achievemement award from Premier John Robarts "in recognition of a distinguished contribution in the field of fitness in amateur sport — 1967."

Other committee appointments include Harry Gay, building committee chairman, C. McGibbon, secretary, E. R. S. McLaughlin, civic auditorium president, Frank Markson, city treasurer, and Wendell Brewster, recreation director.

We wish the committee luck. Oshawa has shown what it is capable of in the Brier held here in 1969.

We feel confident we can do it again, even on a much bigger scale.

On labor, politicians and pollution

On the labor front, we were surprised to learn that millions of Americans still work 49 hours a week and more. These are the down-trodden, backward and non-unionized factions of American society such as the professional, managerial and entrepreneurial types — not "working men."

Consider the lot of Britain's construction workers. According to a recent country-wide survey these poor chaps are losing 45 minutes out of every working hour in order to accommodate such practices as smoke breaks, prolonged lunch hours, extra tea breaks, over-staffing and on-the-job chatting.

How long they will be able to maintain that 15-minute work break is anybody's guess, but if the trend continues it could solve the country's vexing labor problems. What's the point in going on strike against chit-chat and tea parties?

Ever on the alert for anything even remotely suggestive of discrimination on the basis of age, color, sex and what have you, we are inclined to view current union demands for maternity leave with a great deal of suspicion. As we understand it, this benefit would apply only to females. Insomuch as pregnancy is almost invariably a bilateral arrangement, it seems to us that both parties should be entitled to share any accruing benefits.

A fine point, perhaps, but management should explore every possible loophole to avoid this kind of favoritism — even to invoking the terms of the preventable disease act. Otherwise, labor pains are inevitable.

Inflation seems to be slackening off a bit and, if it is, we all owe a debt of thanks to the intrepid lads on Parliament Hill. The leadership they have been providing is indeed reassuring and some of their anti-inflationary legislation is truly inspirational.

An example is that bit governing their own pensions. Under the new scheme, MPs with eight years' service are entitled to draw $5,000 a year for life. For some, this makes retirement possible at the ripe old age of 35 or even earlier.

Indignant howls from the uninformed suggested that greed was behind the move, but the boys were just being realistic. Physically, we all begin to deteriorate after the age of 21 but most occupations do not demand top conditions. With politicians it's a serious matter once the wind begins to go.

In any event, the Ottawa MPs had already done their duty with regard to inflation a few months earlier when they managed to hold the line on old-age pensions — allowing them to rise only from $78 to $79.58 a month.

Pollution remains on everyone's tongue, in a manner of speaking, but things are worse than we thought in Lake Erie. As quoted in the Windsor Star, one US professor said he could name "a myriad of contributing problems to Lake Erie pollution." Those cited included toxic wastes, thermal pollution, careless agricultural practices and "erotic species". With regard to the latter, he pointed the finger specifically at the japanese snail and the Chinese mitten crab.

According to Webster, the word "erotic" means devoted to, or tending to arouse, sexual desire. We really do have a problem if undesirable orientals such as these are on the loose corrupting the morals of Lake Erie denizens.

We also read an account of a mercury pollution test of Lake St. Clair water which showed .008 parts of mercury per million parts of water. This was described as "about half the amount you can put on the head of a pin in a quart of water."

Not very much, we suspect, since mercury is a pretty slippery customer and difficult enough to stack on the head of a dry pin.

What's bugging you? Try our soap box

A letter on this page gave us an idea. In this fast-paced, up-tight society, most of us run into frustrations of one sort or another with annoying frequency. A snotty sales clerk, poor service in a restaurant or perhaps issues at a provincial or national level have us tearing out our hair. What can we do about it? The frustrating part of it all is that most of the time we can't do a blessed thing. This Week would like to change that for you. The English have a pretty good idea of how to blow off a little steam. They go to Speakers' Corner in Hyde Park and stand on a soap box to tell their troubles to the world. Maybe nobody listens to them but it gives them a chance to get things off their chest. Sometimes people do listen and enough people become concerned to get things changed. Each week, we'd like to give you the same opportunity to tell the public what's bugging you. We invite your letters to our Soap Box.

He likes THIS WEEK

Sir:

Have you seen my copy of This Week?

Of all the five weekly newspapers that come to my house the most interesting one to me, is "This Week".

There were one or two items that I wanted to read, but oh well! If I don't find my "This Week", this week, I hope another will come to my door next week.

I was sorry to hear of the death of the Oshawa Journal, many of my friends were hoping that Journal would become a daily. But I guess everybody doesn't own newspapers around the world!

I think if "This Week" is going to survive this sickness, it's going to have to become a family weekly. It's going to have to be more than a one day paper. My wife for instance, heads for the woman's section. Paper's no good, she says, unless it has news for women, like Ann Landers, To-Day's Child, What's New for Supper, Pattern's for That New Dress and at least a Cross-Word Puzzle.

Each of my two children want the latest in sports, school activities, and of course the comic section.

Myself I liked your coverage of the sports dinner, the article on camping.

But I also like articles on travel, gardening, home maintenance, and the one's you've done on

When you're really down you find out who your friends are. I've found that on a number of occasions, and every time it has been a great new discovery. Not that in the past couple of weeks I have been "down". I've been sad at the demise of a newspaper I thought a lot of, but I'm happier than ever with the new one that has taken its place. Perhaps this is a long, long way around to say a big thank you to a whole lot of friends who have jumped in to help put out a couple of THIS WEEKS.

Why don't you write a great big feature about our senior citizens club, suggested one helpful friend. "Throw in a few pictures and it'll fill two or three pages."

Go on a fishing trip with us and take your camera, suggested another. But even on that one I had to take a raincheck. One friend sent me the biography of his grandfather — complete with picture — who used to make a living catching and taming wild horses down in Wisconsin.

And there are others that I've carefully tucked away in a filing cabinet (we've got one; it arrived on Monday).

This particular filler, sent in by a friend, however should not be saved till later, so here goes:

"THIS WEEK'S deserving charity is SEX APPEAL. Please give generously."

Thus far, friends, thank you!

As proudly announced here a few paragraphs ago, we now have a filing cabinet at 22 Simcoe South. Editorial has two drawers in the cabinet; advertising has the other two, clearly marked. And Armour Hanna, our man of the books-that-must-balance (just so you don't confuse him with the book reviewer) has proven himself an expert on furniture of all kinds. Next time you're downtown, come on up to our office and admire the fancy diningroom table our Mr. Hanna found. It's probably one of the finest newsdesks in Ontario, complete with early American top and French provincial legs. . . .

I gave you the phone number last week (576-6450) so I don't have to go through all that again. Be a little patient with us. It rings a lot and we will have three lines before long, Mother Bell promises. For now it's only two. Has something to do with wires and terminals and what have you. One of Mother Bell's sons explained it all very precisely but if I could understand that kind of thing, I wouldn't be here trying to explain it, would I?

Do have a good "think" about some of the things Oshawa's industrial commissioner is saying in this week's THIS WEEK. He does want you to go and visit your rich uncle and convince him of the benefits of building his new factory in Oshawa. Don't have a rich uncle? Try a cousin, or even a distant friend. This kind of thing, in the end, will do wonders for your tax bill. And those of you who don't go out to sell can do a little selling right in that front yard of yours. Would you believe you're a great help by keeping it neat and tidy? The industrial commish says it works wonders.

Saturday night at the Armoury brought a great time. I'm not one for dressing up in a black-tie outfit and parading. But I did enjoy Saturday's Regimental Ball; right from the moment we arrived (early) until we got home (late). The whole thing came up rather suddenly as far as the Brouwers were concerned, so the sewing machine sprung into action last Wednesday for a dress and Murray Johnston had about 12 hours to produce a tux. (Which he did, without fail.) Too bad we couldn't bring our tribe to the ball. I'm still trying to convince the children about the guard of honor that sprung to attention when their beautiful mother walked by. The orchestra was great, the decor was marvellous and Colonel Nicholas M. Hall and his men deserve a big pat on the back.

If you're one of those who "dress up" as often as I do, take my advice. Try and go a little more often. It's great fun and it gives you a big lift. I can hardly wait for the harbor commission or the industrial commission or even the mayor's office to organize the next ball.

Back to the office for now.

In last week's THIS WEEK I wrote about our 576-6450 telephone number and our 22 Simcoe Street South address. What I didn't tell you, because I wasn't too sure, were the details about the office furniture. A little earlier on I mentioned the diningroom newsdesk and the filing cabinet. Well, last Wednesday morning, when it was time to recuperate from publishing another edition of THIS WEEK, I walked up the long stairway at 22 Simcoe South, above Horwich Jewellers. "Great," I said, "we've got a place." Right behind me was our Mr. Hanna.

He thought it was great too.

We opened the door. The place was nice and clean, but there was something missing. Furniture.

"Austerity demands we all work on the floor?" I asked.

Well, Hanna was still negotiating. He doesn't just jump and buy any old diningroom table, and he had only had two days to find something.

Anyway, it was off to Sargeant's Rentals for a pile of card tables and chairs, and when the rest of the staff arrived, the place looked like one of these service club buildings the night before the annual card party. Since there were no cards we all got to work, and that's why you're reading another THIS WEEK this week.

As for the green walls in the place, they're mostly covered now. Every member of the staff has a poster from the friendly neighborhood travel agency showing a scene of his favorite far-away place. My tulip field is there too. And then there are circulation man Martin's maps of every nook and cranny in Oshawa and classified Mrs. Millar's signs and poems and so on.

There's a faint number 22 on the front door, downstairs, but we'll soon change that too.

What's new on home front? Not much. The grass is growing too fast, but so's number one daughter, and she's coping with that part. And a new dog has arrived on the scene. From where, I have yet to find out. All I know is that his name's Blackie, and he looks like a combination Poodle-Saint Bernard-German Shepherd-Collie, and that he'll probably jump, both paws up on my shoulder, next time it's raining and I leave the house in a white raincoat.

There's a story in this week's THIS WEEK about next fall and how nice it will be when the kids go back to school. You'll be thinking that sooner than you think. Meanwhile, with our six we're looking forward to a beautiful summer out on Harmony Road North. If number three and number four daughters start getting up any earlier, they'll see me before I go to bed. They were out walking the dog-combination at 6 a.m. Monday morning just as their father was trying to open his sleepy eyes to look down the driveway towards the barn.

That's it for this week's THIS WEEK, except for another "plug" for our classified section. Give it a try, whether you want to buy or sell a used tricycle or a used car or a washing machine or some of that stuff gathering dust in the attic.

Some dads did it all

Sir:

Recently our son entered his car in the Cubs "Pinewood Derby" race competition with his Pack. We must have misunderstood the instructions given to him, which told him to do all the work he could with some help given from Father, because when we saw the models it was obvious that some Fathers had done all the work and maybe just some of the sons were allowed to watch.

Since General Motors, Ford and Chrysler are having such a hard time selling their cars they should get some of these Fathers to design their models and leave the kids to compete in their own age bracket, as our 8 year old Cub found the competition with Fathers rather tough and disappointing. The few models shown done by the children were obvious and nice to see even if they didn't look like that just rolled off an assembly line.

Father, do you feel guilty?

Parents of a disappointed Cub.

different models of cars in this Journal.

As I've said before of all the weekly's that come to my door the Oshawa Journal was the only one that really got past our waste paper filing cabinet. I hope that "This Week" doesn't become sick.

Miffed at treatment

Sir:

I don't really care whether you publish my letter or not but I'm so mad at the moment, I have to do something or I'll explode. You call yourselves the community newspaper so maybe you'll be interested in what one member of that community has to say about the shameful way the bureaucrats in our government are allowing handicapped people to be treated.

My beef is with the department of transport which, I believe, is responsible for the running of the Toronto International Airport. I'd write the cabinet minister responsible, but I'm sure one of his underlings would intercept the letter and nothing would be done about it.

To get to the point, I took a crippled lady to the airport last weekend for a flight home after a long stay in hospital in Toronto. She was in a wheelchair and while most of the people at the airport were very kind, the restaurant staff could learn a few manners. First of all, we were turned away from the restaurant by a rude waitress who sounded like Lewis Carroll's Mad Hatter. As soon as she saw the wheelchair, she came trotting towards us shouting "No room, no room!" and said they couldn't accommodate wheelchairs. When I asked where I could get the lady something to eat, she directed me down the corridor to a snack bar where I had to pay an outrageous price for a couple of sandwiches and coffee.

There are no tables in the snack bar but only a couple of high counters where you can put ketchup or salt and pepper on your food. The lady couldn't reach these counters and had no place to put down her food, so I proceeded to take the tray out into the corridor where the lady could rest her food on a nearby bench. At this point, I was accosted by a busboy who told me I could not take the dishes out of the snack bar. When I explained the situation, he shrugged his shoulders and said I'd have to speak to his supervisors.

By this time a number of people were looking at us and the lady was very embarrassed. I ignored the busboy and walked out into the corridor. Fortunately, we were not bothered again.

Perhaps this is a small thing to be upset about, but you'd think a place the size of our international airport would be better set up for handicapped people.

Thank you for allowing me to blow off a little steam.

Mrs. John Richardson,
Oshawa.

Friday, July 1

General Motors of Canada has announced that in observance of Dominion Day 1970 the plants and offices will be closed on Friday, July 3, and normal operations will be resumed on Monday, July 6.

North Oshawa School reunion planned June 20

From an idea that first came to light around a bonfire at Mrs. Ed. Shemilt's summer cottage last year, has grown a re-union of students and teachers of old North Oshawa School, 1924-1959, now Queen Elizabeth Public School.

The group of friends met again in January this year and elected a committee to organize the re-union to be held June 20 in the form of a dinner dance at the Legion Hall, Simcoe Street South. The school will be open to visitors from 2.30 to 5 p.m.

The committee was elected as follows: President, Jack Towns; vice-president, Orvel Selleck; secretary, Mrs. Ed. Shemilt; treasurer, Mrs. Ralph Gulliver; publicity, Mrs. Dorothy Warwood; ticket conveners, Mrs. James Finlay and Mrs. A. R. Smith.

Three meetings have been held and the response for tickets has been encouraging. There are still some tickets available at $5.00 each and those interested should call 725-2795, 728-8113, or 725-1397 before June 13. The committee asks all former students to accept this notice as their personal invitation as they cannot undertake to reach everyone by telephone.

There will be souvenirs for all and six specially engraved door prizes.

North Oshawa School was built in 1924 and opened with Irene Rathwell, now Mrs. O. L. Moffatt of Toronto, as the first teacher of 35 pupils. The classes were called Primer, Junior and Senior. The first principal, Jesse Arnott, from 1924 to December 1, 1945 was followed by Lloyd McKee, 1945 — June 1947

Frank Ross who started teaching at the school in 1945 became the principal September 1947 until June 1960.

He was followed by Laurence Hazel in September 1960 till June 1967. Miss Margaret Patterson became principal in September 1967 and continues in that office. The school goes only to grade six but in Jesse Arnott's day he taught grades five to eight and Miss Rathwell, one to four inclusive.

The re-union on June 20 will re-kindle many fond memories.

TAKE CHILDREN TO THE DENTIST EARLY

It is a natural reaction of young and old alike to be afraid of the unknown. Once exposed to a situation this fear will most often diminish or disappear altogether.

At about three years of age, it is a good idea to take your child on a "visit" with you to the dentist. Try to make it when you are just scheduled for a checkup or cleaning rather than some work. Your dentist will let the child sit in the chair for a few moments. Then, when you take the child for his first examination he will have much less fear. Discuss this with your dentist beforehand.

Commissioner says he needs every Tom, Dick and Harry to help sell communities are prime ambassadors for Oshawa.

"It's not a matter of rapping on doors. The fellow who raps on a door once doesn't usually make the sale," says the former appliance salesman.

"You've got to establish good contacts. I'd rather go to the main centres and get into the right offices, and then follow up with a constant program of information."

"You don't want to develop a Fuller Brush operation," says Nicol.

The commissioner began establishing contact with Canadian agencies overseas shortly after he became industrial commissioner. If ambassadors, and banks and trade missions have information on Oshawa, when they do hear of someone wanting to build a plant in Canada, they may remember Oshawa. Oshawa also has established good contact with federal and provincial development commissions but they are geared to the incentive programs, to steering prospective developers to the economically backward regions of the country through promise of subsidies. "We're not opposed to this program," says Nicol, "as long as it doesn't take jobs away from Oshawa.

"The federal and provincial governments have responsibility to the big picture, and a duty to raise the economic standards of all the people," he explains. "But we're violently opposed to taking out any plant or portion thereof and moving it to a designated area. That's robbing Peter to pay Paul."

OSHAWA'S WORKERS

"One of the greatest assets of the city is the quality of workers we have," says the industrial commissioner. "We have skilled workers and a large skilled women's working force."

He also points to Durham College, a community college, designed to provide skilled technicians, administrators and technologists in a variety of fields to serve the community. Then, too, there are excellent vocational schools such as Vanier Collegiate.

Nicol heralds the extension of the Go Transit system to the city. This will move the working population of the golden horseshoe back and forth. I will mean that people who live in Oshawa will work in other communities, but it will also mean that they can live in other centres and work in Osawa.

"We have tapped the large Toronto labor market," he says.

Although he's continually talking to developers and their agents from all over the world, Nicol has to keep much of this activity to himself because the interested parties require great secrecy prior to the opening of new plants. Commercial enterprises, however, are less cautious about having their building plans made public.

Nicol is trying to formulate a more open policy and to bring city council into the process as much as possible as they were involved in the Holiday Inn project now under construction. Holiday Inn was a pace setter. For the first time, Oshawa city council agreed to pay for a good portion of the servicing costs to the Holiday Inn site, on Bloor St., near the Harmony Road intersection with Highway 401. Council realized that the amount expended in putting in a few services would be more than repaid in increased taxes from the building after just two or three years, says Nicol.

NOT IN A VACUUM

The industrial commissioner can't work in a vacuum, he says. We try to let the people and the policy makers know what is going on. The commissioner and council now have a pretty good working relationship, he says. Council is not so suspicious of the need for an industrial commissioner because they can see results.

"They feel that they're partners in the deal and have to do what is best for the whole city," says the commissioner, explaining that he has to clear this approach with the developer first, to determine how far he wants his plans made public.

Council, too has to consider the number of jobs which will be created by inducing the new industry to settle in Oshawa, he points. Holiday Inn alone will employ 100 people, and that's not taking into account the construction workers involved in building.

The industrial commission is working hard to diversify the city's assessment base. Farewell Industrial Park was the first conscious attempt to diversify industry in the city. Now the park, which is almost completely built-up, can account for $15 million annually in sales and has a yearly wage bill between $5 and $6 million.

Several of the original operations in the industrial park have already undergone expansion and expansion plans for others are in the planning stage.

While Nicol is now establishing a long list of clientele, he says, "Once we get out of this slump we've really got to be ready for them."

Class of '45 at graduation ball

By Jo Aldwinckle
Women's Editor

In their graceful long white gowns the graduating Class of 1970 were as radiant as brides at the dinner given in their honor by the Alumnae Association of Oshawa General Hospital on Saturday night. However, the sparkle in their eyes was not to be compared with those of the Class of '45 who received their 25-year membership certificates.

Eleven of the original 14 were present and the class won the silver salver for having the highest percentage in attendance.

President of the Alumnae Association, Mrs. Enid Mountjoy read a letter from a member of the first graduation, Gladys Vernon Archer, Class of 1913, and from Doris Bell a 50-year member.

Mrs. Mary Telford, former director of nursing, recalled the stress of the war years during which the Class of '45 was in training.

"These nurses have been part of the outgoing events of history and have witnessed the inevitable changes which have brought with them adjustment and new attitudes.

"They have learned that they cannot meet problems which plague mankind, by tearing down or belittling or with negative thoughts. It has been done by hard work, humility, faith in mankind and always by loving and giving, to make this world a better one for this generation."

She introduced each member as follows and Miss Jane Cole, Class of 1915, who had conducted each member through her operating room technique, presented the certificates.

Mrs. Peggy Boehmer Sugden dwells in Brownsburg, Quebec and has three daughters, one of whom is graduating from a school of nursing in Montreal. Peggy is now interested in community work, active in Girl Guides and usually keeps in touch by a yearly letter at Christmas.

Mrs. Jean Carruthers Stewart nursed at O.G.H. for two years. After her marriage she has lived in Brampton, nursing at the Peel Memorial Hospital. Her home is now in Weston and she gives of her time as volunteer in the Cancer Society and Red.

Always an anticipated social event, this year's ball held by the Ontario Regiment RCAC at the Oshawa Armoury was an evening to remember.

The ladies appreciated the royal blue canopy and red carpet that awaited their arrival. The troopers on sentry duty, snapping a slick salute to uniformed personnel, also gave the civilian guests a feeling of importance.

Inside, the old drill hall had been transformed through Major M. J. Koster's influence and know-how. A rear-lighted, theatrical backdrop of Italian balconies completely covered the west end. The other walls were curtained ceiling to floor and adorned with the crests of Canada's provinces.

Six-foot high white sconces flanking the colonel's guest area sent up tongues of live flame. Theatrical casemates normally grey stony bulwarks, held flowers and greenery in their recessed bays.

A prismatic glass sphere reflected points of light on the dancers and large jewel-tone lamps hung from the rafters. Floral arrangements, plants and ornamental trees were the finishing touch.

Guests were received by the Commanding Officer Lieutenant Colonel N. M. Hall C.D.; 2nd-in-command Major S. J. Skea C.D.; R. M. S. T. Korson C.D.; President Officers' Mess Committee, Major Ronald Davies; President Sergeants' Mess, W.O. Ian Golding; President Junior Ranks Club, Master Corporal R. E. Downey and their ladies.

Representing the honorary colonel of the regiment, Colonel H. E. Cook who is recuperating from an injury and was unable to attend, was his designate Harry E. Millen who, accompanied by Mrs. Millen, also received the guests.

Among those from out of town were Brigadier General Bruce J. Legge, Region Commander Designate, and Mrs. Legge; Colonel William Maddox, District Commander, Northern Region; Lieut. Colonel C. M. Terry, Officer Commanding Armoured Infantry Training Headquarters, CFB Borden; Lieut. Colonel Peter Fairclough C.D. Commanding Officer Royal Regiment of Canada, formerly of the King's Liverpool Regiment.

Alderman James Potticary represented the mayor and also present from city council was Alderman Gordon Attersley, with their ladies.

The unique ceremony of eating the leek, a physical reminder of the Ontario Regiment's affiliation with the Royal Regiment of Wales, usually the lot of the most junior officers, fell on Major Gordon Sloan, Major Michael Koster and Captain Alex Hill, senior officers but new-comers to the regiment.

Following the grand march, the leek-eaters were paraded along a centre aisle made by the standing guests and the ceremony was observed with full ritual.

The dance band section of the band of the Royal Regiment of Canada provided music for dancing and mouth-watering buffet suppers were served in all three messes from 11 p.m. onward.

To crown the evening the cadets displayed their three recently won trophies: the best all-round cadet corps; the best color party and the best cadet band.

Three cheers for the Ontarios, officers, NCO's and men and for the cadets . . . Tiger!

OGH class of '70 told

Nurse has progressed to professional partner

By Jo Aldwinckle

With the graduation exercises for the Class of 1970 of Oshawa General Hospital, a chapter closes and a new one begins. The new training program for nurses will be based on two years' nursing education with some clinical experience and one year of internship. In the third year the students will be nursing practitioners and will live out of residence.

The new plan has been devised for the province by the Ontario Minister of Health and Welfare, the Hon. Thomas Wells, with the expectation of graduating 5,000 nurses by 1975 to meet the requirements of the province.

Framed by the stage of Eastdale Collegiate auditorium, the 32 graduate nurses and the ten graduate technicians made an appealing picture.

After having received their pins and diplomas from Miss Gladys Hill, director of nursing education, and Mrs. Roger Armitage, vice-president of the Women's Auxiliary, respectively, the nurses made the Florence Nightingale pledge in unison, led by Miss Hill.

A member of the Class of '54, Mrs. John Kietz, addressed the class and spoke of the challenge of change.

"The nurse," she said, "has progressed from a maid of all work to a professional partner. This advancement has not come without change.

"In 1871, institutions for the mentally ill were known as asylums. In 1876, the name was changed to hospitals. In 1953 there were 2,000 patients in the Ontario Hospital at Whitby. Last year there were only 1,000 due to the advance in medical and psychiatric science. The goal is to bring the number of patients down to around seven hundred.

"Ranking fourth among the most prevalent problems of public health, alcoholism is now acknowledged as an illness. In earlier days, it was treated with either disgust or ridicule.

"All this is change; change in public attitude and change in technique. The discovery of the polio vaccine has meant the almost total disappearance of the iron lung and transplants are introducing new horizons of hope.

"Change does not ensure progress, but we must be ready to adapt to it or disappear like the dinosaur."

Congratulations to the graduates were expressed by Alderman Gordon Attersley, representing the mayor; S. E. Lovell vice-president of the board of directors; Dr. M. W. Butts, Chief of Medical Staff.

President of the Board of Directors, E. G. Storie, in his greetings added that the expanded hospital would offer new and exciting opportunities for trained personnel. He thanked R. S. McLaughlin, the Women's Auxiliary, the Alumnae Association and the many departments of the hospital for their contribution to the students' graduation.

Bonita McQuaig of Peterborough expressed the thanks of the class in her valedictory.

Prizes were presented as follows:

The ADELAIDE L. McLaughlin prize for general proficiency, presented to Anne Winter, Cobourg, by Mrs. C. Churchill Mann on behalf of her father, Colonel R. S. McLaughlin.

The Mazo Williams Memorial prize for highest standing in theory, presented to Elizabeth Seward, Millbrook, by Phillip Robson, great-grandson of the donor.

The Class of '69 prize for efficiency in bedside nursing, presented to Niela van der Bij, Whitby, by Miss Lynda Scott, Class of '69.

The Dr. F. J. Rundle prize for efficiency in surgical technique presented to Bonnie Mercer, Oshawa, by Dr. M. W. Butts.

The Eleanor Lovell prize for efficiency in obstetric nursing, presented to Cheryl Dunstan, Scarborough, by Mrs. S. E. Lovell.

The Dr. W. G. Watt prize for efficiency in paediatric nursing presented to Sharon Larmer, Blackstock, by Miss Doris Wright, instructor.

The E. A. Lovell prize for efficiency in medical nursing, presented to Josephine Borysiak, Bowmanville, by Stanley E. Lovell.

The Dr. G. L. Bird prize for efficiency in surgical nursing presented to Marian Hannah, Ansonville, by Dr. O. G. Mills, associate in practice of the late Dr. Bird.

Special achievement award presented to Dianne Reid by Mrs. Wilston.

In the School of Medical Technology the prize for general proficiency was presented to Mary Billett, Bowmanville by Dr. R. M. Clark.

In the School of Radiological Technology, the prize for general proficiency was presented to Susan Brown, Oshawa, by Dr. K. G. Helson.

In the second year class the supervisors' prize for general proficiency was won by Dorothy Bartlett, Angus, and the Dr. W. H. Stanley prize for efficiency in surgical nursing, by Sandra McKnight, Oshawa.

In the first year class the Alumnae Association, OGH School of Nursing prize for general proficiency was presented to Brenda Drew of Bowmowmanville by Mrs. Enid Mountjoy, president.

Little Joanne Head, sister of Barbara Head, Pickering, a member of the Class of '70, presented a sheaf of roses to Miss Hill from the graduates.

Members of the graduation classes 1970 are as follows:

Lucille Ball, Ajax; Mrs. Josephine Borysiak, Bowmanville; Dorothy Broadbear, Streetsville; Marion Buchanan, Oshawa; Judith Burkhart, Windsor; Barbara Chatterson, Colborne; Cheryl Dunstan, Scarborough; Joan Gardiner, Brooklin; Elizabeth Gourlie, Scarborough; Marian Hannah, Ansonville; Barbara Head, Pickering; Carolyn Hegadorn, Demorestville; Carol Johnston, Weston; Diane Kinton, Oshawa; Sharon Larmer, Blackstock; Margaret Lewin, Etobicoke; Lynn Martyn, Port Hope; Bonita McQuaig, Peterborough; Mrs. Bonnie Mercer, Oshawa; Susan Millar, Deep River; Barbara Monaghan, Oshawa; Janice Moses, Bowmanville;

The girls and their Corps competed against entries from all over Ontario, Western Quebec and New York State.

The Tartan Teens took 1st place in the Senior Corp. Division, the Tartan Lassies gave stiff competition to 10 other competing entries in the Junior Division and the Tartan Blues brought home the 3rd place trophy in the Juvenile Division.

Gayle McNally, 17, placed 3rd in Novice Flag in her age division.

In the Advance Duets, Janice Manning and Kathy Ross, both 15, placed 3rd.

Janice also took the 2nd place trophy in Intermediate Solo and Elizabeth Alderton, 14, placed 2nd in Novice Military March. The girls are all members of the Tartan Teens Senior Corp.

Cindy Robinson, 8, brought back the 3rd place trophy for Novice Strut. Cindy is a member of the Tartan Blues Juvenile Corp.

All the girls are students of the Harvey Dance Academy under the direction of Miss I. Harvey that there will be very little incidence of larger classes.

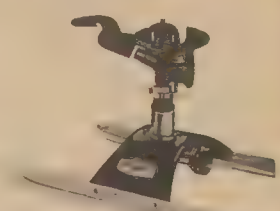
The average increase in the school population has been three to four percent annually, he says. In September, 1969, 350 were added to the school system. The administrators aren't sure what the present economic slump will do to the influx of new people into Oshawa and of new students into the Ontario county school system.

EQUALIZE PROGRAMS

By June of 1971 most educational opportunities will be available to all the students in the county. "In some way we will have an equalized program so that any program is somehow available to any student even if it means bussing him to the appropriate school," says Munroe.

Just how far the schools will go in providing individual programs for all students in uncertain.



"Society will have to determine whether or not it wants that kind of education or can afford it," he says, "because individualization does mean increased costs of education."

Munroe suggests there will have to be close cooperation between the schools and the community to determine the extent to which this approach will be adopted. Parents at first are somewhat apprehensive about the new programs Munroe reports, and want more information. "But generally, once they know what we are trying to do, they support the more flexible programs.

"They also want the assurance that their children will get the basic requirements they need to go on to university." Of course, universities are freeing-up their entrance requirements and eventually they will have their own entrance examinations based on aptitude.

Lay-off bill not the answer: Pilkey

A bill to provide for advance notice of dismissal to workers in lay-offs or plant shutdowns throughout Ontario was introduced in the Ontario Legislature last week by Labour Minister Dalton Bales.

The bill which amends the Employment Standards Act also provides for improved vacation benefits and a number of administrative changes to simplify and clarify present legislation.

But according to Cliff Pilkey, MLA Oshawa, it's "not the answer." In an interview with THIS WEEK, Pilkey described the new bill as something that is "really Tory conservatism at its utmost." Most of what the bill proposes is already being done anyway, Pilkey said. "They're begrudgingly giving us something that we already had."

The real concern, Pilkey said, "is about those companies that close down to move to a lower wage area, or even to another country. These should be made by law to open their books and they should be made to justify their move of closing out, both to the government and the employee."

That, the Oshawa MLA said, "would make nothing more than a good corporate citizen of such a firm."

Meanwhile, Labor Minister Bales said his bill will provide for notice in individual layoffs, and, in the case of mass layoffs or plant shut-downs, the Act requires advance notice to the Minister as well as to the workers.

He said the legislation was designed to protect workers against the impact of economic changes and at the same time leave management free to respond to the need for change.

"It was the Government's feeling that further legislation was needed to deal with layoffs and possible exploitation of the workers, but careful consideration had to be given to the positions of both management and labour," he said.

"We feel that in a dynamic economy, with changing technological and consumer requirements, there will be slowdowns in some areas of business, but growth in other sectors, with the overall trend in the direction of growth."

"It would be foolhardy to stand in the way of such changes, because taken overall, they ensure efficiency in our industry and help to assure full employment and rising real incomes," he said.

"Because of this management must be free to respond to the need for change and to adjust their operations to improve productivity and efficiency.

"On the other hand it is just as necessary to protect the workers against the impact of these changes and, as you know, both the federal and provincial government have passed earlier legislation and developed programs to bring this about," Mr. Bales said.

"That is why we in Canada now have such measures as unemployment insurance, Canada Manpower Job Placement Services, mobility grants and re-training programs.

With the proposed legislation he said, "this government now intends to take other important steps to minimize the impact of economic change."

In the case of mass layoffs or plant shutdowns, the Bill specifies that an employer shall not terminate the employment of 50 or more workers in any four-week period until after the expiry of notice in writing to the Minister and the employees as prescribed by the regulations. The Bill will empower the government to make these regulations and Mr. Bales said he expects to hear representations on these.

The Bill will specify notice requirements in individual terminations which are without "cause" and in these lay-offs the required notice will be graduated according to length of service:- one weeks notice for an employee with three months to two years service; two weeks notice for those between two to five years; four weeks notice for those between five to 10 years service; and eight weeks notice with service of 10 years or more.

Bales said that the notice requirements would not operate in such situations as seasonal or intermittent employment, short-term layoffs, legal strikes or lockouts and in other cases where lengthy notice would not be possible.

Another provision of the Bill will provide that employees are to be credited with two weeks vacation with pay in the second year of service with an employer. At present the provision is two weeks for each year after three years of service.

Legislature ponders layoff

Bales said the Bill also will prevent an employer from avoiding the benefit provisions of the Act by transferring an employee from one company to another so-called "associate company".

Other provisions will facilitate collections of underpayments of minimum wages and other standards and will empower the levying of a penalty assessment against an employer who has underpaid an employee.

He said that in order to facilitate enforcement, the Bill will make it possible to launch a prosecution up to a maximum of two years after the offence instead of the present six months and it will increase the amount collectable by the Branch on behalf of the employee from the present $1,000 to $2,000.

Win Temple holds down a full-time job on two fronts

What's it like for a wife who works outside of the home? Is her home life neglected? Do the husband and children mind? Does it make her more or less of a woman? This is the first in a series of articles about Oshawa's working wives and mothers.

By Francine Fortier

Win Temple, mother and wife, holds down a 37½ hour a week job and still manages to keep her family happy and satisfied.

Win says she likes to work. And her family doesn't mind at all. "My husband, Syd" says Win, "doesn't mind a 'working wife' — he thinks we're individuals too and besides he's always appreciated the help.

"A lot of people say with working mothers the children are inclined to run wild. But we've never had any problem with my twenty year old son, David. Actually, I think it has helped him become a more independent and self-reliant person."

ORGANIZED

Win says she doesn't work because she has to — she just likes to work. "I'm a more organized person when I'm working" she says, "both at work and at home.

"I first started working when I lived in Montreal, before I was married, because I needed the money. And then after I was married I think it developed into buying a home over the years — I was able to help my husband do this, and then it just became a way of life."

For 24 years Win has been doing secretarial work. At present she does secretarial work — typing, and general office duties for the Treasury Department of the City of Oshawa.

ACCOUNTING

Originally she came from Montreal where she went to high school. She quit after grade 10 because she financially couldn't afford to continue. After working for a short while Win then took an accounting course at a business college in Montreal.

In 1952 she moved to Oshawa with her husband and settled at home for two years. Her next jobs were with Field Aviation at the Oshawa Airport for 4½ years; Doctor Henry Verville, for two years; Public Utilities for five years; part time with Office Overload for eight months; the Treasury Department of the City of Oshawa, (where she acted as Commissioner of Finance, Frank Marks son's secretary for three years); then she became ill and stayed home for a few months and now she's back with the Treasury Department.

Such a variety of jobs — and this is one of the things Win likes best. "I really enjoy the different routines I run into in different offices" says Win. "This way a person doesn't get stale. All the time you're meeting different people and the dull routine doesn't set in."

VALUE

Win believes in the value of a variety of learning experiences — of being a "Jack of all trades". This is why she has taken, in addition to her secretarial training, evening courses in accounting in the Ryerson extension program at McLaughlin Collegiate and Vocational Institute. She also plans to take French this fall and may take on some accounting "home work" in some of her spare time.

Spare time?! Oh yes, Win finds plenty of spare time which she uses to its fullest advantage.

She is district chairman for the Peterborough and District Golf Association. Here, she and her committee set up tournaments for her particular district. Win also has been an active member in the Hospital Auxiliary.

During the 21 years of their marriage, Win and Syd have had plenty of time to devote to sports which they enjoy together — especially golf and curling.

Both like to read too, Win — her fiction and historical novels and Syd — his detective stories.

Syd doesn't feel the least bit neglected. He's a good cook and if Win isn't home, he makes his and her meals. And Win gets him off to a good start in the morning with breakfast at a quarter to six.

Win's hours are from 5:45 a.m. until 11 p.m. Does she ever get tired? "Through the week" says Win, "I try to take it fairly easy. I get tired quite often, but then I find being organized helps me

Smaller homes, fewer frills are trend

We can no longer afford "our own little castle"

For Oshawa, in 1969, the average income of purchasers was $9,768.

"Young married couples" says Girling, "are finding it difficult, in the circumstances of today, to satisfy a desire to become home-owners. For this reason local builders turned to production of semi-detached units four years ago and in the ensuing period have satisfied to some degree the demand for modest housing. With costs continuing to increase and having regard to current interest rates, other methods of providing home-ownership have been sought. It is becoming most obvious under these existing conditions, that the buying public must be prepared to accept smaller homes with fewer 'frills', and smaller lots in subdivisions.

ROW AND CONDOMINIUM

In some municipalities, the demand from families with incomes below the national average has been met with the construction of row housing and condominium units. These have provided acceptable accommodation at lesser cost than the detached house while offering the amenities of home-ownership. Units of this nature have not yet been constructed in Oshawa, but some builders are considering them for future housing programs.

The spiralling costs of education with the resultant high taxation is a factor which makes this approach most difficult. Municipalities, out of necessity, are presently forced to zone land in a manner that will raise the necessary financing through taxation to meet these education and other costs. Notwithstanding, there is a great need for lower cost housing that could be satisfied through the condominium type units and future planning must provide for changing requirements.

"There is every indicatin that housing costs have risen above the purchasing capacity of many Oshawa citizens," Girling says.

A very high percentage of the purchasers of local homes are employed by firms located outside the Oshawa area.

Robert Andras, the federal Minister responsible for housing, realizing the problems with respect to making housing available to persons of low income either by home-ownership or rental accommodation, earlier this year invited the house building industry across Canada to apply its experience and expertise in developing solutions to these problems. To assist with this special program the Federal Government made available $200 million and the response on a national basis has been encouraging.

"It seems that only by a pooling of the brains and resources of government at all levels, the building and allied industries, the trade unions and the public at large can the challenge of our housing problem be met head on and resolved," Girling observes.

LAND

And what about the land situation?

"Prior to 1962" says Wandless, "Oshawa was a city of single family homes with very few apartment buildings — most of which were built in the mid '20's.

"Since this time the scene has been shifting considerably until we are now at the point where we are building 50 percent multiple and apartment buildings and 50 percent singles.

"Most people prefer the single family homes — most people want their own little castle. So it's simply a matter of economics, they can't afford it anymore.

"The sky-rocketing price of land, increased cost in house building materials, the new federal tax on building materials, and last but not least, the service costs which are required by the municipality account for this."

Initially, in the early 50's all that was required of the municipality was the grading and gravelling of the roads in the subdivisions. Since that time, the subdivider has been required to pay for the cost of sanitary sewers, storm sewers, pavement, curb, gutter, street lighting, underground wiring, sidewalks, etc.

These costs have progressively been added from the 1950's to the present time.

TWO CHOICES

The municipality had two choices before itself — either the subdivider pays for it and it is absorbed into the cost of the home for the purchaser, or the city mist issue debentures to cover the costs for these improvements.

But the city, having to keep its debenture debt within certain limitations could not afford this. That left it to the subdivider.

Because of this, says Wandless, "people, particularly, young married families, have found it necessary to go into apartments. And presumably, if they are both working, they hope to save up enough to buy a house of their own.

"The best you can do now in round numbers for a new single family dwelling is around $24,000. In order to qualify you must be making an income in excess of $7,500 a year. That rules out a large share

Cross as well as some part time nursing.

Miss Betty Cawker has had a varied experience, travelling around the world, nursing in Alberta, B.C., New Zealand, Australia and the United Kingdom. After returning to Canada Betty had several years of private duty with an interval of 4½ years as a full time worker with the Ontario Department of Public Welfare. She has worked for a term in Yukon as a matron of a hospital and later in the Eastern Arctic as Housing Educator with the Eskimo Rental Housing Program in the federal government. Presently, Betty is experimenting with retirement but the north calls.

Mrs. Louise Foley Bell now resides in Bowmanville, serving part time regularly in Bowmanville Memorial Hospital. Louise has a daughter graduating from Ottawa Civic Hospital School of Nursing this year.

Mrs. Ferne Gilroy Olsen has served in nursing for various periods of time. Her home is at Flesherton, Ontario and she is actively engaged in community work. In January, 1970 Ferne and her husband enjoyed a delightful trip to Rome.

Mrs. Isabelle Harden Matthews worked in her home hospital at Cobourg for a few years, then Toronto Western Hospital before returning to O.G.H. in 1947. She is now settled in Scarborough, serving in the delivery room at the hospital there.

Mrs. Corinne Lynn Alp lives in Temiskaming and has continued her nursing career for all of the 25 years. She is now matron of the Temiskaming Hospital.

Miss Esther Matheson is frequently seen driving around in Oshawa and the surrounding area in the Victorian Order of Nursing car. She has served faithfully for many years.

Mrs. Catherine Minto Ormiston lives in Bowmanville. She has completed a course in nursing unit administration and is now a Head Nurse on surgical ward at Bowmanville Memorial. Catherine is a grandmother.

Mrs. Jean Pipher Backey was employed first as a V.O.N. in Toronto and later in the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital. She attended U. of T. and served as assistant night supervisor at the East General Hospital before she married in 1960 and lives at Stouffville. She enjoys farm life with her many animals and is now involved in real estate and antiques. She has time to be a head nurse in Central Supply Service in Newmarket for five years.

Mrs. Mary Wilkins Meldrum now lives in Port Hope and was actively in nursing until her marriage in 1964. She has enjoyed industrial nursing, then served in a doctor's office and finally in the O.G.H. nursery.

Those who are absent are:

Mrs. Virginia Major Chatt who lives in Vancouver.

Mrs. Margaret Somerville Rainford did V.O.N. nursing in Toronto and her home is there now.

Miss Minnie Iola Smith travelled with Betty Cawker and later obtained her B.ScN. at McGill University. Iola is employed by the Ontario College of Nurses and is studying for her Master's degree.

Mrs. Joyce Stewart introduced the graduating class; Miss Jean McNair proposed the toast and Miss Barbara

The toast to the Alma Mater was proposed by Mrs. Ruth Brittain, Class of '55 and Miss Gladys Hill, honorary president and director of nursing education replied.

Nancy Mardon Pickett Class of '55, was awarded the walking cane for travelling from Spenard, Alaska, 3700 air miles, to attend.

Another point of interest came to light when it was revealed that graduate nurse Carol Johnston of Weston was the daughter of Audrey Williams Johnston, member of the Class of '47.

The night shift

A Man Called Horse is featured at the new Marks this week. A wierd Indian film about Richard Harris who gets tortured a lot.

Starting today at the Plaza is Where Eagles Dare with Richard Burton and Clint Eastwood and The Dirty Dozen with Lee Marvin and Ernest Borgnine. Two war movies with lots of "gutsy action."

An "adventure" film, the Adventurers, starring Ernest Borgnine is still on at the Regent. Lots of body action. Starting Friday is The Damned, a restricted film about Nazi Germany and the Krupp family, starring Dirk Bogarde.

M.A.S.H. with Donald Sutherland starts this Wednesday at the Odeon. A controversial comedy about a medical unit stationed behind the lines.

A double bill at the Oshawa Drive-In this weekend. John and Mary with Dustin Hoffman and Mia Farrow, (does Mia play John?) and The Boston Strangler, a great film with Tony Curtis, who plays one of his best roles.

On at the Odeon Bay Ridges is Easy Rider with Peter Fonda and The Looking Glass War with Christopher Jones.

It's the Iceman this week with rock and roll at the Cadillac.

Chris Sullivan with four beautiful girls plays a popular beat at the Central's Gold Rush Inn.

And it's more country and western at the Hotel Whitby's Jim's Stage Door with Bud Roberts.

A popular music groups, The Common Bond is featured this week at the Carousel Inn.

At the Georgian is The Par Four, a variety group.

It's Caliope, rock and roll at the Genosha's Harry's Hideaway.

At the Spruce Villa in Whitby is Ranee Lee and the New Inventions — popular dance music.

Whitby Arts has water colors show

"Across Canada in Water Colour", an exhibition of paintings circulated by the Art Gallery of Ontario, will hang in the Council Chambers of the Whitby Municipal Building, 405 Dundas St. West, for two weeks, until June 19.

Whitby Arts Incorporated invites the public to view this exhibit as it has previous exhibits by local and area artists. The exhibit is open Monday, Wednesday and Thursday 9 to 5 p.m. through June 19th.

"Across Canada in Water Colour" is a group of 35 paintings selected from many done by Dainis Miezajs. Dainis was commissioned in 1967 by the late Douglas Duncan, founder of the Picture Loan Society, Toronto, to travel across Canda and create a visual record in water colour of the geographical aspects of this country.

This exhibition covers the artist's travels from Newfoundland to British Columbia. His very special and unique water colour treatment gives a dream-like quality to all the paintings. Dainis has an instinctive sense of design, and through his personal vision rugged landscapes are transformed into serene compositions.

Hockey professionalism a big joke, Frenchman tells This Week's reporter

By TOM DOUGLAS

Canada is the laughing stock of the international hockey scene because of her ongoing battle over using ex-professionals.

The whole argument is a bit of a sham. Teams from other countries use professionals all the time and get away with it. It's all a matter of semantics.

This point was brought home to me a few years ago on a short tour of Europe. One of the activities set up for me by the French tourist bureau was attendance at a hockey game between a French team and one from Switzerland.

In between periods, I visited the French team's dressing room where I interviewed Peter Laliberte, the playing coach. He was a French Canadian from Sorel, Quebec.

"This professionalism bit is a big joke," he said. "I've talked to players from all the teams over here and they just laugh about it. They're all professionals. They're paid for playing hockey, they just don't call a spade a spade."

Pete explained that the teams, especially those from Iron Curtain countries, are made up of "factory workers" who punch a time clock in the morning, practice hockey all day and then punch out to go home.

For the record, they work in a factory and that's what they are paid for. In reality, they are being paid for playing hockey. Avery Brundage, through some mental acrobatics by his conscience, ignores this fact.

Pete Laliberte pointed out other examples of discrimination that Canadian players suffer in international games.

"We know the referee is going to favor the other team but we can't do anything about it," he said. "They figure because we're Canadians we're going to be tough and they watch every move we make."

He added that every time a Canadian player tries to retaliate for a roughing up administered by an opposing player he gets a penalty thrown at him.

"These referees know the rules of the game, but it goes too fast for them," he said. "Because of this, they nail the Canadian player every time and give the others the benefit of the doubt."

Pete's words were prophetic because when he went back onto the ice for another period after talking to me, he was given a 10-minute misconduct penalty for arguing with the referee over what he considered a bad call.

The French fans obviously agreed with him because the referee had turned his back to the booing crowd just after sending Pete to the cooler when an irate fan reached over the boards and grabbed him by the hair, pulling him into the stands.

The surprised referee was saved from lynching (or would it be guillotining?) by prompt action on the part of Pete who extricated him from the clutches of half a dozen frenzied fans.

Pete had a few more remarks to make about the officiating following the game.

"You've just seen the best in refereeing over here," he said sarcastily. "That guy knows as much about this game as I know about riding a camel."

Pete was dispirited over more than his 10-minute misconduct penalty. His team had lost to the Swiss club by a score of 9-7. The playing coach blamed this on his team's lack of experience.

"These guys come to us from all parts of France and most of them have never even seen a hockey stick," he said. "For example, six fellows out on the ice tonight put on skates for the first time last September."

Pete's explanation was backed up by a look at the arena's hockey program. One player, Aroles Gerard, was an 18-year-old from Sidi-Bel-Abbes, Algeria. I had noticed him during warm-ups, skating on his ankles.

The program itself provided a bit of entertainment. Besides listing the names and biographical sketches of the players, it offered definitions of terms used in hockey for the novice enthusiast.

"Le Slapshoot", with two o's, was described as "a specialty of the great players, a long hard shot". "Le puck" was explained as "a rubber cylinder indispensible for playing hockey".

The penalty box was called "le prison" and was said to be used "as a place to calm the spirits", "hors jeu" was the term used for offside and "l'arbitre" or "director of play" was one of many names the referee was called that night.

songs by Henry Mancini and Johnny Mercer . . .

The hilarious comedy THE OUT-OF-TOWNERS starring Jack Lemmon and Sandy Dennis uses whimsical lighthearted music by Quincy Jones . . .

Otto Preminger's most tastefully restrained film since "The Moon is Blue", and probably his most sensitive, is his new picture entitled TELL ME THAT YOU LOVE ME, JUNIE MOON, soon to open in this country.

Rumour has it that Barbra Streisand has her covetous eyes on the stage show "Colette" soon to be made a motion picture. Barbra has always been a fan of Colette's, as she indicated when attending the wind-up party of ON A CLEAR DAY YOU CAN SEE FOREVER, dressed as Colette.

The paperback of CATCH 22, which is lensed by the famous movie Director, Mike Nichols, and scheduled as this summer's major motion picture attraction, will also be published by Dell Publications as a special motion picture editon.

gas of now there are 60 days shooting in Venezuela, South America on MURPHY'S WAR starring Peter O'Toole, as well as 10 days shooting on THE INTIMATE GAME starring Anicee Alvina and Sean Bury, produced and directed by Lewis Gilbert, who did "The Adventurers".

The well-known Director, Henry Costa-Gavras who gave us the memorable "Z", has done it again. His new production THE CONFESSION will be on the local screens soon. Yves Montand and Simone Signoret are cast in the tale of imprisonment of a high communist official during the Stalinist purge in Eastern Europe during the mid fifties.

From fame to fame, the football star Joe Namath is now also a Movie Star in the contemporary Comedy with music along with Glen Campbell and Kim Darby in NORWOOD, directed by the son of the celebrated Jack Haley.

The Press response in Toronto has been overwhelming for the engagement of the fascinating Courtroom Combat Drama of THE LAWYER' which is presently showing in multiple theatres (six).

of the population.

"And another thing which has been soaring over the years is the interest rate. Fifteen years ago it was five percent, now it is up to 10 percent — doubled. This is reflected in the monthly payments on the home.

170,000 PEOPLE

"If all the land within the present limits of the City of Oshawa were built upon, to the densities as provided in the zoning by-law, we could accommodate a population of 170,000 people, in all forms of housing. We are presently about 90,000 and we are growing at the rate of approximately four percent compounded each year.

"But there are factors which we must consider. At the present time consultants are conducting extensive studies involving the limits of metro Toronto on the west, to east of Bowmanville, including all of Ontario county and portions of Durham county.

EXPANDED

"From this study — the Oshawa Area Planning and Development study — the external boundaries of the new regional government area will be determined and the number and size of the boroughs within this area will be determined. So, our boundaries are going to be expanded.

"Also, in the Design for Development for the Toronto centered region, prepared by the provincial government, they have forecasted for Oshawa a future population to the year 2000, in excess of 250,000.

"It's going to become increasingly more difficult for young married couples to purchase a single family dwelling.

"However, I'm wondering if our philosophy isn't changing. A lot of apartment dwellers aren't living in a house because they can't afford to, but because they don't want all the upkeep that goes into a house.

"The sense of values is changing now and the apartment way of life is becoming more acceptable than 15 or 20 years ago.

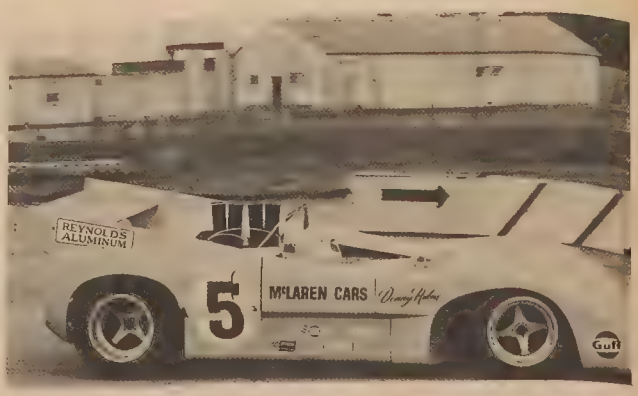
to keep going. I set my own pace and realize my own cut off point."



Win says she does get those odd days when she feels like packing the whole working business in. "Whether you're married or single" she says, "I think, sometimes, you'd just like to be yourself instead of trying to be pleasant, constantly, all day."

Has Win received any criticism for being a "working wife?"

"Years ago" says Win, "I would receive some criticism when I worked with a church group or similar organization. A lot of people are dedicated homemakers and can't see anything along that line. But then, I saw that some of these people belonged to a lot of clubs and I figured I was at home just as much as they were.

"My family has never complained about my job. And I don't think any woman could do it without her family working with her."

Can-Am race this weekend

More than 30 of the world's fastest racing cars have entered the Can-Am for the Labatt's Blue Trophy at Mosport this weekend, and organizers expect a full field of 35 cars by race time.

Oshawa is headquarters for a number of special Can-Am events this weekend.

Despite the tragic death of Bruce McLaren, 1969 Can-Am champion, the bright orange McLaren cars are favored to win the Can-Am series. But strong opposition is expected from several new entries in the 11-race, million-dollar series.

New Zealander Denis Hulme, who was McLaren's teammate through 1967-69, when the McLaren cars failed to win only three of 25 races in the three-year span, insists that he will be ready to race despite severe burns to both hands suffered in an accident while practising for the Indianapolis 500.

Team McLaren manager Teddy Mayer has announced that British driver Peter Gethin will be at Mosport, ready to take over in case Hulme's injuries prevent him from driving.

Strong opposition to Hulme is expected from the new March Can-Am car, driven by another New Zealander, Chris Amon. March Engineering, a racing team formed this year, has already proven its ability by building a winning Formula One Grand Prix car on its first try. World Champion Jackie Stewart won the Spanish Grand Prix in the March's second world championship appearance.

Young George Eaton of Toronto could be a threat in the new BRM-Castrol-Chev, the first BRM entry in the series. Eaton was fifth in the Can-Am in 1969, driving one of McLaren's 'customer' cars, based on the design of the 1968 team car.

The L&M Team Lola, with New Yorker Peter Revson driving, is also expected to be a contender for the J-Wax Trophy. The Lola factory is concentrating heavily on Revson's car, not trying to field a large entry, as in previous years.

A dark horse that could wind up in the winning circle is the revolutionary AVS Shadow, built by Californians Trevor Harris and Don Nichol and driven by hard-charging George Follmer. The Shadow, a scaled down Can-Am car which uses much smaller wheels than regular Can-Am cars and has a greatly reduced frontal area, was clocking highly competitive times during a testing session at Mosport last week.

Jackie Oliver, a Formula One teammate of Eaton's on the BRM Grand Prix team, is also given a chance of making an impression in the Autocoast Ti-22-Chev, a super light Can-Am machine that was extremely impressive in its brief debut at the end of the 1969 season.

Beer business best as status quo retained

Provincial Secretary Robert Welch has given a clear indication in the Legislature that the Ontario Government has no plans to allow beer to be sold in grocery stores. He also asserted that Brewers' Warehousing Ltd. operates on the lowest cost margin of any comparable retail-wholesale operation in the nation. (Brewers' Warehousing Ltd. is owned by the breweries but its stores operate under the control of the LCBO.)

Welch said BWL's administrative costs are about 9 per cent of its sales, compared with a cost ratio of 7.1 per cent for LCBO stores.

"I would also like to remind Members of this House that beer is cheaper in this province than anywhere else in Canada", Welch added.

THE CITY OF OSHAWA

CITY OF OSHAWA

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS

TO DESTROY WEEDS

Notice is hereby given, in accordance with the Weed Control Act, (R.S.O., 1960, Chapter 427) that every person in possession of land within the City of Oshawa shall destroy all noxious weeds thereon throughout the growing season as often as may be required to prevent the ripening of the weed seeds.

The City of Oshawa will operate under Section 13 of the Weed Control Act which provides that if the above requirements are not complied with, the Municipal Weed Inspector may cause the noxious weeds to be destroyed on any subdivided land and on lots not exceeding ten acres, without further notice being given, and place the charge for destroying the weeds on the tax roll for collection in the same manner as for taxes.

Weed pollens are the principal cause of hay fever and allowing noxious weeds to grow and mature is an offence under the Act.

All citizens of Oshawa are requested to co-operate in the control of noxious weeds on lands in their possession. A list of contractors who have indicated their availability for weed control on private property may be obtained by telephoning the Department of Public Works at City Hall, 725-7351, Extension 340.

Municipal Weed Inspector.

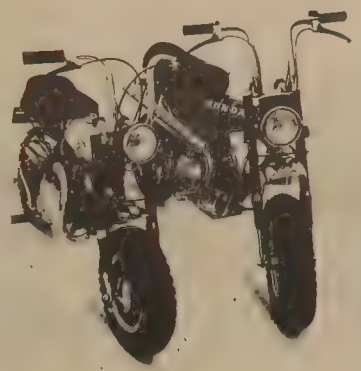
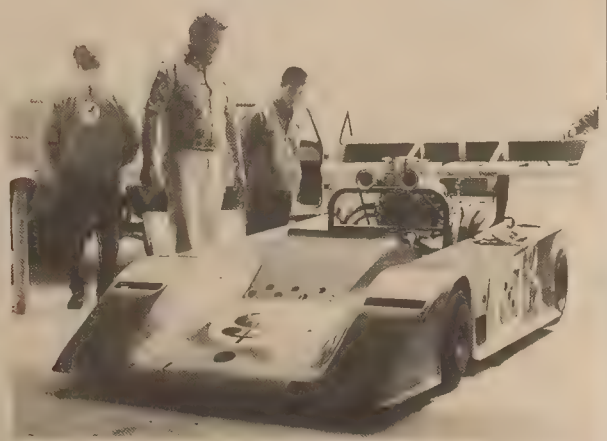
Soccer off to start in Whitby

Soccer was a little late in getting started in Whitby this year, but things are humming now. Registrations were held at the Whitby Community Arena, Brooklin Memorial Arena, Willow Park, and Palmerston Avenue Public School.

The registrations were divided into two age groups to be called Pee Wee (7-10 years) and Bantams (11-14). There are five PeeWee teams and six Bantam teams in competition this year.



House league games for the PeeWees will be played on Tuesday evenings beginning at 6:30 p.m. at E. A. Fairman Public School, Henry Street High School, Willow Park, and Brooklin Fair Grounds. Games for the Bantams will also begin at 6:30 p.m. on Thursday evenings at the pitches at Willow Park, HENRY Street High School and the E. A. Fairman Public School. The PeeWee league kicks-off the start of their season this Tuesday June 9th followed by the Bantam league on Thursday evening June 11th.



Due to the late start it has been decided that Whitby Minor Soccer will retain its affiliation with the Ontario Minor Soccer Association as a "House League" only and not enter any teams in Ontario Cup Play.

Anyone who is interested in helping out in any way is requested to contact the Recreation Director at 668-5803 any time between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Broadbent urges reader reaction to questions

By Edward Broadbent, MP Oshawa-Whitby

Soon Parliament will recess for the summer. During this period I look forward to returning home to Oshawa. I thought you might be interested in some observations about Parliament and Canada prior to my return.

UNEMPLOYMENT — We are now experiencing the highest level of unemployment in many years: 6.7% nationally and as high as 20% in certain areas. The Liberal Givernment must receive much of the blame for this situation. The Prime Minister is deliberately creating unemployment in order to deal with inflation. We New Democrats have pointed this out and now many others agree including economists in Canada's leading universities and certain prominent Liberals — notably the new Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa. The decline in automobile sales and consequent unemployment in Oshawa and Whitby is a direct consequence of the government's economic policies. Unless Mr. Trudeau starts to listen to intelligent criticism, conditions will worsen.

THE WHITE PAPER ON TAXATION — No other issue has produced as much controversy in this Parliament as the government's proposal for tax reform. I am pleased that so many of you have written to me giving explanations of your views (I have not yet replied to all the letters. I promise to do so).

I am for some parts of the White Paper and opposed to others. I support the introduction of a capital gains tax and the reduction of taxes for the average person. However, I strongly oppose the following: The capital gains tax on owner-occupied homes, the reduction of income tax on those earning more than $50,000 and the maintenance of taxes on people living at the poverty level. If you would like a fuller expression of my views on the White Paper, please write to me and I will galdly send you a copy of a speech I made on it.

PENSION AND SALARY INCREASES FOR M.P.'s — Recently Parliament passed a bill which increased pensions for Members of Parliament. The vast majority of New Democrats opposed this bill (there were only two exceptions) on the grounds that while old age pensioners and veterans were being ignored by the government, it would be supremely unjust to improve conditions for ourselves.

There is a good possibility that the government will pass a bill increasing the salaries of Members of Parliament during the life of this Parliament. If it does so, I promise to vote against it.

SERVICE CENTRE — Remeber the New Democratic Party has an office at 3½ Simcoe St. S., Oshawa, for your convenience. It is open every afternon Monday-Friday. Mrs. Phyllis Clarke is our secretary. Drop in or give her a call about any probem. (Telephone No. 723-2381). Cliff Pilkey, M.P.P. for Oshawa, is there is person every Wednesday night, to deal with any provincial matter and I check regularly to see if anyone has a problem within federal jurisdiction.

I think it is very important for a Member of Parliament to hear directly from the people in his riding. Would you please pass along the following questions:

Do you favor most of the proposals (insofar as you know of them) in the White Paper on Taxation?

Have you had an opportunity to read the White Paper on Taxation?

Do you favor making legal the use of marijuana, say with roughly the same regulations as pertain now to the sale of alcoholic products?

Do you think too much of Canada is owned and controlled by those living in other countries?

Do you think the Canadian government should take action aimed at bringing effective control within Canadian hands?

Do you think those working in our factories and offices should have an effective role in deciding whether or not factories and offices are to be

Whitby yacht club bustling with boating buffs

By Francine Fortier

Warm weather, lots of sunshine, and a host of white sails are keeping the Whitby Yacht Club so well fertilized, it can't help but grow.

Just take a look at all those sun-burnt, enthusiastic sailers racing out of the Whitby harbor on a Wednesday night! The sailing season is from May until October and during this time there is a turnout of about 35 sailboats a week. A hundred sailers will compete in the sailboat races for trophies which are awarded at the end of the year.

Rudie Sprenger gets his sail boat ready

THE BEGINNING

Things weren't always so busy. When the club was initiated in 1965 the total membership was 15. Together with the interest the club generated, and the amalgamation with the Oshawa Yacht Club last year, the membership increased to 175.

Accompanying this growth has been an expansion and improvement of club facilities.

In 1965 the club began from scratch. They literally didn't even have any soil in which to develop roots. The land on which the club house now stands was originally a swamp, and the club members had to fill it; the basin had to be dredged in order to accommodate the boats; and docks had to be built.

PLEASURE

All of the financing has been provided by the members.

Now that the Oshawa harbor is to be used solely for commercial shipping, and the next nearest harbor in this area is the relatively small Frenchman's Bay to the west, the Whitby harbor is receiving most of this region's business. Pleasure business, that is.

Whitby Yacht Club Commodore, Bruno Harilaid says, "We are here for those who boat for pleasure. We provide recreation facilities for this area. Our specific purpose is to take advantage of the natural harbor facilities, and to provide and encourage the recreational and safe use of the water in this part of Lake Ontario."

The club is open all year round. From March — April the boats are prepared for the water, during the warm months the boaters are out on the water, and during the rest of the year, "the members and their families sit down at the club house and talk about boating," says Harilaid.

Plans for the future?

"There is some talk about having the Canada Summer Games in this area," says Harilaid. "If so, the Whitby Yacht Club hopes to participate. We would handle the sailing activities and participate as much as we can."

Of course, this would also mean an extension in yacht club facilities.

Plans are already underway for a construction of a new club house. "We expect to have the plans ready for next year," says Harilaid. "This club house here, is not big enough. The lounge-recreation room, is 18 feet x 35 feet and only fits 40 members comfortably."

MORE

At the present time, club members are building additional docks and expect to dredge 15 acres of water lot to accommodate the ever increasing amount of power and sail boats..

This will allow an increase in area for another 250 - 300 large boats.

And it's not only local boats the yacht club "harbors". "We have hosted," says Harilaid, "a number of visiting yachts from the United States, England and even New Zealand."

This summer the club intends to give one or two courses in training young people in sailing. Harilaid says the club feels it is very important for young "sailers" as well as "old" to learn water safety and the sheer pleasure of sailing.

Would you favor a bill which would compel companies to give substantial notice, say three-six months, before a permanent layoff is enforced?

In general would you say Prime Minister Trudeau's government has been a good one?

How do you think I can better serve people in Oshawa and Whitby?

THE JOGGER still fighting Battle of the Bulge

By Tom Douglas

Twenty-five years after the end of the Second World War, some of us are still fighting the 'Battle of the Bulge'.

Our weapons are not guns or bayonets, however, but running shoes, sweat socks and a track suit.

Our battlefield is not a Belgain farmyard or the Ardennes forest, but the streets and back lanes of Oshawa.

The enemy is a society that thrives on bowling banquets, midnight snacks, pizzas, happy, lazy beverages and neighbourhood kids who will shovel out the driveway for a buck.

The battle of course is our attempt to whittle away the excess poundage from our waistlines. To some of us, jogging is one answer.

That's right, jogging. I confess to being one of those nuts you see on your way to work in the morning huffing and puffing along the roadside.

I can joke about it now because I'm past the phase where I looked each passing motorist in the eye with a challenge, daring him to laugh so that I could make an obscene gesture at him.

I am no longer self-conscious. I have lost 12 pounds through my efforts so the rest of you can take a flying leap as far as I'm concerned. I'm sticking with it.

I suppose I sound a little bitter about all the onlookers I've encountered over the countless miles I have logged in Oshawa. I guess it's because at the outset, I considered myself just as nutty as they did.

Can you imagine my embarrassment that first morning when I walked the gauntlet in our apartment lobby of all those sleepy-eyed fellow tenants waiting for a ride to work.

There I was, dressed in a sweat suit that bears a striking resemblance to the long johns Uncle Charlie used to wear. Sticking out in front was a fair-sized pot that I had lovingly developed while sitting in front of the television set all winter.

If I had been in their position, I would have snickered too, but I was on the receiving end and I didn't like it one bit.

The worst was yet to come however. I was so badly out of shape that all I could manage was a short run up the sidewalk to the corner and back. This meant another walk through the lobby with the same people snickering and this time I was so pooped I could hardly catch my breath.

Somehow, though, I persevered and my run gradually got a little longer with a little less effort. Today, I'm jogging the 1½-mile block bounded by Nonquon Road, Simcoe Street North and Taunton Road.

The biggest obstacle in my path these days is not that lobby full of people, but myself. The novelty of the run has long-since worn off and I find myself thinking of all sorts of excuses at 6 o'clock in the morning for not getting up and running.

However, I have devised a little trick that works for me. I have put the alarm clock on our window sill and when I get up to shut it off, I glance out the window.

Down the road, I can see the cemetery at the corner of Nonquon and Simcoe and I think about all the people in there who might have been alive today if they had taken better care of their hearts. That's enough to get me moving.

Actually, once I have reluctantly donned my outfit and have stumbled down the stairs to the front door, I am usually glad that I forced myself to get moving once again. Our particular area is beautiful in the morning with a slight haze being burnt off by the morning sun and hundreds of birds welcoming another day.

This feeling actually increases as I jog along, marred slightly each time a car drives by. I can actually taste the exhaust fumes.

As I near the end of my morning ritual, rather than being fatigued, I am strangely enough bursting with energy. So much so that I end the run at full-speed for about the last 100 yards.

Once in a while I still see the odd driver chuckling as he speeds past, but usually his mirth has set all three of his chins jiggling and I figure I'll be around to have the last laugh.

Should you decide that you would like to lose a few pounds of that winter sludge that has settled around your waist, I invite you to take up this sport that is beoming increasingly popular in North America.

One or two words of caution though. First, make up your mind that you're going to stick to it no matter how tempting it feels to stay in bed in the morning.

And, even more important, don't try to break the four-minute mile your first day out. Start with a short run and gradually work up your speed and distance.

And when that alarm goes off in the morning and the self-pity sets in, just remember that around Oshawa, there are a number of others just like you, all of us wishing we could turn over and catch another half hour's sleep.

..... and he's his own biggest obstacle

Kiddies' column

"I don't like my home"
Said the parrot Jerome
With a hop, hop, hop and a peck, peck, peck.

"I want to be free
Just to be me"
And through his cage he stretched his neck.

One day he got out
And flew all about
And said he would never return

But he couldn't see
The way things would be
And what he would soon come to learn

To the city he went
Where a whole day he spent
Getting lost in the factory smog

To the country he flew
But what did he do?
Some feathers he lost to a dog

To a forest he fled
To rest in a bed
But a hunter drove him away

"Oh dear" said Jerome
Who now had no home
"I wish I had someplace to stay"

As he sat there so blue
Thinking, "What can I do?"
He suddenly remembered his cage

"I'm silly" he thought
"I almost forgot"
And off he flew in a rage

But when he could see
With the greatest of glee
His cage still there, friendly and cozy

He opened the door
And was happy once more
And life began to look rosy

With these thoughts in his head
He then went to bed
And began to doze after a while

"There's no place like home"
Mumbled Jerome
And went to sleep with a smile

"We're having a great big party at General Motors and everybody's welcome", say Elaine Burke and Ellen Muir. The girls, both GM employees, are helping to publicize GM's Open House at the South Plant. GM will be opening its doors to the public of Oshawa and district next Tuesday and Wednesday, June 16 and 17. Monday, June 15, will be a preview day for GM folks and their families.

the community and to the country. Some 1,200 passenger cars and 400 trucks are pouring off the GM production line each day at GM's south plant.

Visitors will see the modern day miracle of mass production as new automobiles roll by them at the rate of one per minute. They'll see welding, metal finishing, the mechanical hand inserting seats into cars, the chassis flipper, the body drop and the testing of completed cars.

However, since there are thousands of individual operations in the building of each car, visitors will see only the more spectacular steps. Others will be explained to them in descriptive signs, displays and by the GM guides during the Open House tour. Loudspeakers at strategic points will spell out what's going on.

Roland S. Withers, president of General Motors of Canada said the Open House is planned to give many thousands of Oshawa and district people an opportunity to get a first-hand idea of how GM builds cars.

Withers said: "All of us at GM are proud of our plant and our production facilities at Oshawa, and we're even more proud of the fine products we build. We feel that our operations are of interest to all the citizens of Oshawa and we cordially invite them to feel free to come along and see how their city's biggest business operates."

During the three-day period, some 25,000 people are expected to tour the plant.

Production of passenger cars will be maintained at the normal rate so that visitors will have a true picture.

14,000 people earn $130 million a year

Some 14,000 people are employed at the Oshawa plants of General Motors of Canada. The company's wage and salary bill at Oshawa amounts to $130 million annually.

The first Oshawa-built car, a McLaughlin Buick was produced in 1908. More than 7 million cars and trucks have been built by General Motors of Canada since that date.

At any one time, there are 2,000 vehicles in progressive stages of assembly on General Motors of Canada assembly lines. The GM main assembly lines are six miles long.

The hourly-rated payroll each Friday at General Motors of Canada in Oshawa totals $2 million.

In the course of a normal production day, 1,200 cars and 450 trucks roll off the end of assembly lines at General Motors of Canada.

It takes approximately 23 working hours to produce one GM car from start to finish. During this time the car travels on floor conveyors a distance of six miles.

More passenger cars are built at GM of Canada's Oshawa plant than in any other automotive plant in Canada.

General Motors of Canada's daily shopping bill in Canadian goods, materials and services totals $3 million.

GM women in the North Plant Wiring Department handle 1 million feet of electrical wiring each day. They make electrical wiring harnesses for Oshawa and Ste. Therese-built vehicles.

Every day transport trucks and railway cars bring 6 million pounds of materials into GM of Canada plants in Oshawa for use in production.

In the GM of Canada Paint Shop, 20 basic colours are used in production. At present production, 2,400 gallons of prime and colour paint are used daily — about two gallons per car.

Here's a spin-out during the weekend's Formula 4 race at Mosport.

1,700 Oshawa area students looking for a summer job

By Francine Fortier

There are 1700 students in the Oshawa area looking for employment.

And there are three people frantically working to find them jobs.

Operation Placement is what it's called. It's a student summer job program operating in Oshawa this summer in co-ordination with the Canada Manpower Centre and the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber of Commerce has provided the office space and facilities; the Manpower Centre has provided the people to organize the program; and an area stretching north to Port Perry, west to West Rouge and east to Durham County has supplied the student benefactors.

BUSY

It's a busy little office on Simcoe Street South. The phone rings every day with students asking to have their names put on file. And handling the 1700 student names on file at present, is a busy team — Brian Gilchrist, Heather Davis and Ruth Pascoe.

Unfortunately, the phone doesn't ring as often with employers wanting to hire the students.

So far this summer, Operation Placement has only been able to secure 117 jobs for all these students. Of these, 86 are male university students, 23 are female university students, four are male high school students and four are female high school students.

TOBACCO FARMS

Every employer in the Oshawa-Ajax-Bowmanville area has been approached by Operation Placement — offices, retail stores, service stations, industries and even the tobacco farms in Pontypool.

In a THIS WEEK man on the street survey, students were asked what they plan to do for jobs this summer.

TURN TO PAGE 26

Garbage strike pending?

Oshawa may be in for piles of garbage with the prospect of a strike by the city's sanitation personnel.

And if not settlement is reached, auditorium, public works and parks departments will be affected as well.

Oshawa's 250 sanitation, auditorium, public works and parks employees voted overwhelmingly in favor of strike action Monday to back up contract demands. The workers, members of Local 250 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, rejected the city's latest offer. The majority favoring strike action was 98 per cent.

Doug Lindsay, CUPE national representative said wages, service pay and welfare are the issues still outstanding in contract talks with the city's personnel department. Lindsay expects the two sides will meet in an effort to resolve the difference, although no date for a meeting had yet been set.

He said the union has asked the Ontario Labour Relations Board for a "no board" conciliation report, and that the report is expected almost any day now. Legal strike action could take place 14 days after receipt of the report.

A union statement issued following the meeting Monday said the workers were told two years ago that a City of Toronto settlement was good enough for Oshawa's outside workers. However, to date Oshawa has not matched the offers made to Tornto employees.

MP caught in police radar

The best of us get caught by the all-present radar devices of the Oshawa Police Department. They pop up in the most unlikely places at the most unlikely times.

Ed Broadbent, MP, "home from the hill" in Ottawa spent several early mornings last week chatting ith GM workers at the plant gates.

One morning — he was almost a little late — his parliamentary motorcycle was caught in the net of an Oshawa Police Department radar unit.

Not wanting to let his people down at the plant gate, Mr. Broadbent convinced a courteous police officer he was really he, and he was off to an urgent appointment at the plant gate, and could he please go and report to the police station later.

He reported.

The MP's mother assured us on Monday her son had left for Ottawa Sunday evening. Which means he must have paid the fine instead of sitting it out.

Part of the 10,000 GM people and families and friends who attended the GM Open House at the South Plant Monday. At one point the line-up of those waiting stretched for three-quarters of a mile.

A mayor and his city

Mackey explains mayor's changing role

Bruce Mackey was destined to become mayor of Oshawa sooner or later, whether he wanted to be or not.

It was sooner.

In fact, Mackey might never have run for mayor at all. In the fall of 1968, prior to the last municipal election, Mackey declined to run for mayor and opted instead for board of control even though he was a popular and respected alderman.

Instead Hayward Murdoch was elected Mayor for the 1969-70 term. Mackey drew more votes at the polls than any other member of council including Mayor Murdoch and long-time vote leader Ald. Gordon Attersley.

When Mayor Murdoch fell ill last September, Mackey was even finding city politics a bit dull and contemplating the day when he could return full time to his prosperous law practice and spend more time with his young family.

"All my life I wanted to be a lawyer and studied hard to achieve this goal," he said. "Now I feel this is what I want to do."

But Mackey could not avoid his responsibility and perhaps his destiny. It was obvious he had the strong public support a mayor needs and as acting mayor for Murdoch, the 36-year-old controller was the natural choice when council picked a successor to Murdoch who was forced to resign for health reason.

LEADERSHIP

Now that he is Mayor, Mackey is dedicated to providing the best possible leadership for this city. He is basically interested in people, rather than institutions and material developments, and dedicated to making this community a better place for people to live.

Urban redevelopment of the downtown core is essential, he says. But you have to be careful not to have a sterile development of functional buildings, the mayor cautions.

"You have to make your urban renewal scheme people oriented," Mackey says. "With smelly bookshops, flowers, boutiques, places for people to sit and watch or eat. Urban renewal is not just a matter of solving traffic problems or getting rid of old, unattractive buildings, or creating new parking spaces.

One object is that it has to be oriented to people to make a pleasant place for people to live in an urban centre.

"This is one of the problems of urban growth," says Mayor Mackey. "We tend to think of street problems as development problems when really they are people problems. The management of civic offices must be geared towards solving people problems so we will have a better place to live, and shop from the standpoint of the quality of life."

The mayor's overall objective, he says, is to try to keep in mind that everything he does mut be oriented towards people, helping and serving, and to influence all committees back to being concerned with the quality of life of the people we are governing.

"We're not working in a vacuum at city hall," the mayor says. "And each department does not address itself merely to technical problems or academic discussions. Their decisions and actions must relate back to the governing of the people."

The young lawyer says he may not have the intellectual depth of some leaders of council — like Ald. Dr. C. E. McIlveen, or Ald. Edward McNeely — "but I hope I can evoke some responsiveness from my department heads and staff." Mayor Mackey says his very inexperience may be an advantage in seeing old problems and situations in new ways and it may also encourage fresh enthusiasm on the part of the staff.

MAYOR'S ROLE

One of Mackey's prime interests is the role of the mayor in a modern community.

The mayor must be the leader of the community, he feels. The mayor should not hesitate to guide council in the decision-making process.

The mayor, says Mackey, is the only who has a broad, total picture of the city. Other council members are associated with certain aspects of the city government as members of standing and special committees.

The mayor belongs to no committee and to every committee. It is his job to co-ordinate the efforts of all departments to see that their programs are not in conflict and that there is a minimum of duplication of work. He is in a position to pinpoint areas where things can be streamlined or where policies are lacking.

The mayor also must maintain communications with federal and provincial officials and ministers, to tap their sources of information for anything which may affect Oshawa's future.

Knowing people in the right places also has the advantage of increasing the weight of Oshawa's voice in provincial and federal decisions which affect the city. Mayor Mackey to date seems to be impressing the people at Queen's Park that he is capable, intelligent and worth cultivating.

A landmark in his early months as mayor is the battle to retain the Ontario county assessment offices in the city. Although Mackey lost the fight, his persistent and vigorous approach obviously created an impression on some provincial ministers.

Mackey feels the mayor needs some assistance if he is to fulfill the proper function of the mayor.

ADMINISTRATOR

A city manager would relieve the mayor of his administrative duties, he says. In effect, the mayor is not only political head of the community, he is also the super-administrator. It is impossible to do both jobs well. Mackey says, and points out that he is not trained as an administrator.

The coordination of departments and programs and the implementation of policy laid down by city council should be in the hands of a professional administrator, says the Mayor. Council considered a proposal to hire a city manager for Jan. 1, 1971 but voted it down.

A city manager would leave the mayor free to guide council's policy making. It would also permit him to participate in community affairs to the extent to which he feels a mayor should.

A mayor should not confine himself strictly to opening new factories, speaking at dinners, attending dances, and welcoming visitors to the city, Mayor Mackey feels. This of course is an important aspect of his job and allows the mayor to test the public feeling on various municipal proposals and problems.

However, the Mayor should also become involved in the real problems affecting the people of the city.

Earlier this year, Mackey and Industrial Commissioner Robert Nicol flew to Ottawa for discussions with Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister, Jean-Luc Pepin.

Mackey outlined the unemployment situation in the city, described the lay-off circumstances, presented a brief of the adverse effects of the Canada-United States Auo Trade Pact on the automotive industry in Oshawa, and stated objections to the administration of the federal government's incentive program to industry to locate in economically-under-developed areas. This is a fine program says Mackey, but only as long as industries aren't encouraged by the promise of grants to move away from one area to provide jobs in another. This simply means that they are creating employment in the new area and throwing men out of jobs in another, he explain.

NEGOTIATION YEAR

In this year when so many contracts are up for negotiation, Mackey is attempting to bring labor and management together on an amicable and sociable basis prior to the start of contract talks. He feels that this kind of informal meeting, where each group finds that the other is quite likeable, will help to allay suspicion and mistrust and provide a better atmosphere for conducting negotiations.

As the city grows, and Oshawa is now 87,000 strong, Mackey feels the Mayor's office must expand to keep up with the changing role of the mayor. Today's mayor of a large busy city must give his full time to the job, and not share it with his normal duties, says Mayor Mackey.

To encourage good people — from business, industry and labor — to seek this position and be willing to devote their time unstintingly to the office, the position must pay better than at present. The present salary is $10,000 with a small expense account. The mayor is not even provided with a car although he must do a great deal of travelling on behalf of the city and encounters extra expenses because of his position. The mayor's wife, too, Mackey points out, is an unofficial unpaid employee of the city, and as such must have a suitable wardrobe. To fulfill the functions required of the wife of the mayor, she must also leave her children in the care of a babysitter.

"A person is motivated to seek the office of Mayor because of his desire to accomplish some specific aims at the municipal level of government," says Mackey. "Many citizens would accept a loss of income, or certain inconveniences, if this sacrifice resulted in attaining some positive goals. Public service is a strong motivating factor if something can be accomplished."

NEEDS RESOURCES

"Therefore, a mayor needs resources to provide the leadership that council and the community are looking for," the Mayor emphasizes. "The Mayor must at all times keep the community informed of its potential and appeal to their civic pride so that this city can be an example for all other cities."

Mackey believes that the council and the people of the community expect the mayor to be a leader. He says, "the leader must know, must know that he knows, and must be able to make it abundantly clear that he knows."

Therefore, says Mackey, the mayor must read, and study all the latest information from provincial and federal departments and agencies. He also has to have time to listen and to tap public opinion, not only from the man on the street or at the luncheon meeting, but from the radio and newspapers.

"The Mayor must endeavour to be aware of the mainstream of thought in his community," says Mayor Mackey. "Only then can he decide to encourage current popular thinking, or oppose it, or mould it and shape it to the greater benefit of the community taking into account the total picture.

"The mayor must be the key person to ask for the cooperation of the community, demand the greatest of efforts from his council and administrative staff to enable the city to achieve its goals."

An executive assistant to the mayor could greatly assist the mayor in planning and implementing

Big Oshawa program July 1

Looks like Oshawa is in for a two-hour parade on July 1, says William Tredwell, vice-president and parade chairman of the Oshawa Folk Arts Council.

A contingent of the Ontario Regiment RCAC with armored vehicles will lead the parade, with its trophy-winning cadet band. Lieut. Colonel N. M. Hall will take the salute at the Oshawa Armoury where guests of the regiment and the Folk Arts Council will be assembled.

Having received the ancient honor of the Freedom of the City, the Ontario Regiment takes precedence and may parade with "bayonets fixed, drums rolling and colors flying."

A former Regimental Sergeant Major, Joe Frendo Combo, will act as Chief Marshall for the decorated parade. Participants are asked to assemble at the Mid-Town Mall and to be ready to move off by 10 a.m.

The route will be along John Street to Simcoe Street, then north to Alexandra Park where all entrants are asked to wait for the presentation of trophies.

Trophies may be competed for in the following categories: Bands, senior and junior; marching units; majorettes; clowns; antique cars; horse and rider; decorated bicycles (boys and girls); commercial; non-profit organizations or service clubs; private entries and national or cultural float.

Two trophies will be awarded this year in the national float category, the original and prized Old Country Club trophy and the Folk Arts Council President's Trophy.

Leading the Folk Parade will be the Festival Rose Queen, elected by the readers of THIS WEEK. This lucky young woman will receive $100 cash prize and reign as Queen of the Day.

Ten bands have indicated their intention of taking part, including as a special attraction the International Scout Band from Indianapolis. Numbering over one hundred this prize-winning band will be in Oshawa due to the good offices and fine co-operation of Scout Commissioner Stanley Richardson.

Another visiting band expected is the General Vanier Secondary School Band from Cornwall, Ontario.

As in past years, the Folk Arts Council will honor Oshawa's Community Queens by inviting them to ride in the parade in their national costume.

The following to date, are entering decorated floats: Kinsmen Club, Jaycees, Odd Fellows Corinthian Lodge; Oshawa Historical Society; Canadian Automotive Museum; Oshawa Little Theatre; Oshawa Lions' Club; Oshawa Leo's Club; YWCA; Harman Park Association; Club Carib; UNICEF; Rotary Club (three entires one with Timmy and Tammy); Rotaract Club; Lake Vista Park Ladies; Federation des Femmes Canadiennes-Francaises.

In which we see an inept government that'll have us all unemployed and with no place to live...

By PETER BROUWER

After a week spent in his riding, with early morning visits to plant gates and a pre-election type schedule of other visits, Ed Broadbent, MP Oshawa-Whitby, called the riding press out for a press conference Friday.

Now I'm not much of a one for press conferences where all us reporters share questions and answers. I like my subjects to myself. But when you don't have an Ottawa correspondent — and I don't — you heed your MP's call and show up on the second floor of the Genosha, pencil and paper in hand and you take note. So here goes:

9 a.m. Subject looks fine. Relaxed, and at the same time wide awake. Subject is accompanied by one of the party's regional organizers. Coffee is ordered.

A late arrival from Whitby enters. He's a working newsman. He doesn't look very relaxed.

Subject and press discuss the state of the world today, and particularly that in Oshawa and area.

Subject scrapes his throat and says let's get on with it and he gets on with it.

He tells us about his week in the riding and the people he has met. He has met many, very many. He intends to keep doing this kind of thing every Spring and Fall.

Subject's assessment of the Trudeau government: "After two years I've come to the conclusion we have had the most conservative and socially inept government since World War II. He (Trudeau) has allowed to happen what would not have been tolerated had Pearson or Diefenbaker been the PM. He has managed to carry through a disastrous political program."

Subject on the government's record in office "Last year I said there had been two pieces of legislation with some significance. The Omnibus Bill which amended the Criminal Code, and the languages bill that brought linguistic rights to minorities. And both were hangovers from the Pearson era."

And what about the Canada Water Act?

"It wasn't designed to do what it should. We need national standards of pollution control to be effective; not provincial ones. The provinces must be compelled to stop this vicious competition for industry by lowering pollution control standards."

As for the cabinet's right to decide when to export water, "this is a permanent kind of activity ... something the Commons should decide."

Christmas Day on December 27?

Here's a news item that may very well appear in your favorite daily newspaper within the next few years:

OSHAWA, Dec.7. In a joint statement issued this morning, Local 222 United Auto Workers of America and General Motors announced that Christmas and Boxing day this year and in future years will fall on the Monday and Tuesday closest to the 25th day of December.

A spokesman for the group added that the decision was based on the wishes of management and labor as expressed on the occasions of other holidays.

Good Friday, the spokesman said, would become Easter Monday, and Easter Monday would henceforth be celebrated on the following Tuesday, or in case of rain, on the Monday following the Sunday after Easter.

Here ends the news story.

And don't for a minute believe it's all that far fetched and impossible.

July 1 — call it Dominion Day, or Canada Day, or whatever you like — doesn't fall on July 1 this year, but on the following Friday.

So the majority of the working people of Oshawa have decided.

And that's a shame.

July 1 is our big Canadian Day. Why should it not be an annual occasion on which we as a nation celebrate our national traditions and accomplishments? We don't have to do that in a way which would suggest a belief in the superiority of ourselves over people in any other country, but rather in such a way that we adults and our children are made aware that we do have a distinctive and commendable history of which we should be proud.

The decision by the General Motors people to hold July 1 on July 3 jeopardizes a proper celebration of our big day in Oshawa and Whitby.

All of us should have the opportunity to devote one day a year to a serious and joyful celebration of our past.

After last year's last-minute decision to hold July 1 on other than July 1, Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent took the issue to the floor of the House of Commons and introduced his Bill C-104, in which he proposed his Canada Day Act.

What happened to the bill? It went to committee and it eventually died in the slow bureaucratic process.

But perhaps we should knock at Mr. Broadbent's door and ask him to have another stab at this issue.

If we don't do something, remember that news item about Christmas Day. If there was ever a "day of the people", July 1 has got to be it, and if we want it badly enough, all we have to do is go and get it.

About our garbage....please!

Have you taken a look at the Oshawa Creek lately?

Take a walk along the creek bank from city hall south towards the freeway. The creek has begun to look like a real stream again. Before too long we may even have healthy fish in it.

The signs of Operation Scoop earlier this Spring by the students of Oshawa are still clearly visible . . . . and enjoyable.

And in this year of pollution consciousness we are going to be faced by a strike of the garbage collector?

Apparently negotiations have not been progressing favorably and a 98 per cent of the union membership vote in favor of a strike earlier this week would indicate considerable dissatisfaction.

A "garbage strike" is one that really hits home. It "gets" all of us. It can become much more unbearable than a mail strike and a majority would agree it's worse than a "beer strike."

We do appeal to the union people and city negotiators to seek a settlement quickly, before a strike becomes necessary and we turn the whole city into a big mess.

A little higher grass in the parks for a few days we could put up with, but please, gentlemen, don't do the other thing to us.

What's bugging you?

Try our soap box

In this up-tight society, most of us run into frustrations of one sort or another with annoying frequency. A snotty sales clerk, poor service in a restaurant or perhaps issues at a provincial or national level have us tearing out our hair. What can we do about it? The frustrating part of it all is that most of the time we can't do a blessed thing. This Week would like to change that for you. The English have a pretty good idea of how to blow off a little steam. They go to Speakers' Corner in Hyde Park and stand on a soap box to tell their troubles to the world. Maybe nobody listens to them but it gives them a chance to get things off their chest. Sometimes people do listen and enough people become concerned to get things changed. Each week, we'd like to give you the same opportunity to tell the public what's bugging you. We invite your letters to our Soap Box.

Postal tie-up hurts everyone

Claims that the rotating postal strikes are really not hurting the post office department or the government but only harassing the public are not supported by Postmaster General Kierans.

Chances of turning the post office into a modern competitive enterprise are being ruined by the present situation, said Mr. Kierans. The post office is losing millions of dollars in revenue as the public turns to other means of delivery. The long term effect on post office business could be disastrous.

The ultimate losers could be the public. The postal workers also will suffer if the place of the post office in the national economy is diminished. It will become impossible to provide the guarantees demanded by the postal unions of job security. It will be more difficult for Mr. Kierans to fulfill his prophecy of more jobs in a modernized, expanding postal department.

The suggestion is raised that all this can be avoided if the government's treasury board will promptly settle with the postal unions. In present circumstances it is not that simple.

The government is trying to establish a formula of restraint in wage and price increases. That aside, the mechanics of cost-price increases are different in private industry and government.

There may yet emerge the "reasonable" settlement both sides in the postal dispute are seeking. Both should perhaps try a little harder to achieve it. No one is being helped by the present floundering situation. Given a chance, postal service in Canada is still one of the best buys available and it should not be destroyed.

A leader?

It would seem at this time there is a good chance Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent will be competing in the leadership race of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent has not announced his candidacy for the post, but the pundits have it he's definitely in the race.

If he is, we believe he would stand an excellent chance of winning.

During his time in the House of Commons Oshawa's MP has been much more than an ordinary back bencher. He has grown as a politician. Many believe he is fast growing into a leader.

A step up, such as the leadership, is a step up for Oshawa.

We wish our member of parliament wisdom if and when he joins the race.

by peter brouwer

A couple of issues ago I mentioned something about the nice and easy life of the weekly newspaper editor. Wrote one "fan", "don't tell me about your troubles; you newspaper people with all the time in the world on your hands have it pretty easy. Now look at me, working on the assembly line. I've got to be at the gate at a set time, and from there on everything's on schedule." And on he went about the oft underestimated contribution to life of the assembly workers.

In many respects the life of a weekly newspaper editor — and probably any newspaper editor — is easier on the nerves than that of an assembly line workers.

Enough of that philosophy. Let me just fill you in on one little weekend all of which perhaps wasn't in the line of duty, but most of which was pretty hectic all the same. It's this past weekend. And I didn't even get to Mosport. . .

Friday night, 7.30. I had finally given in to requests of the family to go shopping with them. Plans called for a 7.45 departure for the Oshawa Shopping Centre, with stops at the grocery store and a number of other places. Boys needed soccer boots, girls needed sandals, and a skirt, and a new purse, and whatnot, and there were a number of places that had advertised bargains in THIS WEEK, the family exchequer announced.

Well, at 7.35 the telephone rang. It was Ed Broadbent, MP. Just when the kitchen phone rang, there was a helluva commotion in the kitchen. It had something to do with the dog and a new leash. The commotion was so loud, it took me some time to even establish the caller was the MP HIMSELF. When I finally impressed on the crowd — hand over the receiver — that there was a very VIP on the telephone, and added it was "the MP from Ottawa" a hush fell on them and they listened in awe as their mother and father were invited to "get away from it all" for a few hours. What would we like to do?

"We would like to sit down with you all night and discuss your qualifications for the leadership of the New Democratic Party," I thought, but thought better of it, and we settled on seeing a movie followed by a nice quiet chat over a drink

So off we were shopping. Couldn't call that off after a solemn promise to go. Back we were at 9.15. Late we were for "The Damned" at the Regent, which was chosen as the night's entertainment. MP thought it might be an interesting piece of film making that would shed some light on the political storm that raged in Germany prior to World War II. I thought the movie would be great because somewhere I had read it had something to do with the Krupp family, about the comings and goings of which I'm an expert after finishing William Manchester's "The Arms of Krupp."

We got to the movie a bit late, and perhaps that's one of the reasons we didn't quite "get" it. But the title is a way off. They should have called it "incest is fun."

It was pretty bad and a terrible waste of time.

A brief visit to the Georgian made up for it though. Those General-Motors-Workers-Turned-Musicians play and sing up a storm, and why anyone would possibly want to turn that place into a senior citizens home is beyond me.

On the way home the editor's wife observed it is nice to meet a politician who isn't a typical politician.

And then came Saturday which was relatively quiet with working in the livingroom-office combination we have here, in the garden, and in the basement fixing flat bicycle tires.

But at 7.30, about the same time it happened on Friday, there was another invitation. "Come to the harbor at 12.30 tonight and see a ship come in."

I came. I ended up being part of the "roping party." What's a roping party, all you non-sailors? Well, it consists of two or more people who stand on the pier in total darkness and have ropes thrown at them, from a very large dark hulk of steel that towers way over their heads in the water, which some people subsequantly grope for said ropes on the dark wharf and pull like mad until the bigger rope at the end of said ropes appears out of the water to be noosed around big solid pieces of steel that rise from the concrete of the harbor key.

Anyway, I groped, and my tribe at home was very proud next morning when I showed them how I had singlehandedly (well, nearly) tied up this big ship all by myself. . .

The captain of the Framptondyke (from Hull, England, loading Lasco steel) was so impressed by the fine roping efforts of yours truly, he invited him to bring the family for a tour of the ship.

He was a bit surprised when eight Brouwers showed up next morning, but he DID say the whole family. Some of the crew must have been wondering whether this was "open house" as little Brouwers appeared in all corners of the ship wondering "where does this go" and "how do you steer this thing" and "where's the periscope" and "do you have an outboard motor for emergencies on the ocean."

But it was great fun, and the chief engineer ended up going home with us for supper, following which a trip to beautiful Port Perry and Lake Scugog was in order. And, did we get some gorgeous stories of the sea. . .

So much for a great weekend.

There are a lot of people in our midst with varying senses of humor. How about this one, attached to a reply to THIS WEEK's offer of free job seeker ads to students? One student writes:

Dear Ed..

By the way, how about giving yourself a break?

I'm a great writer and I've been there once already to tell you that. I haven't got a quarter to come and repeat the good news again . . . Another newspaper told me you were lousy, which goes to show you how impartial and unshakable I am.

I still want to work for you.

I gave up a terrific opportunity working with the Indians, because I needed cash to go back to school . . . now if I can't get a job, I'll have to go to James Bay and drown myself. Nobody likes to make mistakes of that magnitude.

P.S. I'm even learning to type in preparation for my brilliant career. If you're really out to help us underdogs, I'm a member of the club who pays his dues regularly

My friend does write a new kind of application. I hope it'll bring her some luck.

Unicef committee chairman explains Lenin eulogy

Sir:

I am writing this letter in response to the article written by Mrs. Aldwinkle that appeared in your paper on May 27, 1970, regarding the United Nation's, specifically UNESCO's practice and programme as it relates to the centenary of the birth of Lenin.

When this question was first raised, I contacted the Secretary-General, David W. Bartlett of the Canadian Commission for UNESCO in Ottawa and received the following information.

By way of introduction, UNESCO is a specialized agency of the United Nations concerned with international co-operation in education, science, culture and communications. Thus within their frame of reference, UNESCO performs broadly the same functions as FAO carries out in food and agriculture and the World Health Organization (WHO) in medicine and public health.

There are in UNESCO 126 Member States reflecting almost every shade of economic development, social structure and ideology. The sovereign body of UNESCO is the General Conference which meets every two years. It is made up of official delegations from each Member State, and each delegation has one vote, that is — one country — one vote.

It will be quite clear that if a universal organization of this kind is to accomplish its purposes, there must be a certain amount of tolerance on ideological questions. One must recognize and respect the fact that other governments and other cultures have strong views, even though one may deplore them.

For the current two-year period, the General Conference was asked to authorize the recognition of two centenaries that some Member States felt were important. The individuals concerned are Ghandi and Lenin. The government delegations at the Conference voted on this and as a result of a democratic vote, in the programme there is a financial allocation of $37,000 for symposia and publications marking the Ghandi centenary and $8,000 for a symposium held in Finland a few weeks ago marking the Lenin centenary. This is a very tiny portion of UNESCO's budget which amounted to approximately $77 million for the two-year period 1969-1970.

All Member States, incidentally, contribute to this budget according to a scale which reflects, both wealth and population. As a matter of interest, the U.S.A. is the largest contributor at approximately 30%, and the U.S.S.R. the second largest at about 15%. Canada comes in 6th or 7th with about 3%. These are all assessed contributions from governments.

In addition to the specific activities on these two centenaries, the UNESCO secretariat regularly circulates a list of anniversaries of individuals or events which the Member States putting up the names feel are important and propose to commemorate. By the circulation of the list, other countries are invited to take account of these anniversaries, but the organization itself devotes no significant funds to this purpose. Thus in 1969 interested nations observed the anniversaries of Constantin, Leonardi da Vinci, Frank Lloyd Wright, Peter Brueghel (the elder), Mathatma Ghandi, Erasmus, Rembrandt and Matisse, as well as the anniversaries of the foundation of Cairo, and the discovery of New Zeland by James Cook. The listing notes that 1970 is the anniversary of Wordsworth, Franz Lehar, Charles Dickens, Beethoven, Lenin and the granting of the Negro vote in the United States to name only a few. It might be of interest to the concerned citizens of Oshawa of Central European descent that the name of Taras Shevchenko appeared on this list for the anniversary celebrations a couple of years ago.

With rare exceptions it has not been the practice of the Canadian Commission for UNESCO to respond to the invitation implied by this list. The Canadian Commission did pay some attention to the Ghandi Centenary last year but have been content to leave the other names (including Lenin) to those countries more actively interested. As a result of this freedom of choice, the National Commission of the U.S.S.R. for UNESCO has chosen to actively participate in the Lenin centenary, and indeed eulogize Lenin.

Mrs. Aldwinkle's statement, "It was obvious that the men and women present at the meeting were shocked and sick at heart at the very thought that the United Nations would eulogize Lenin, the murderer of millions", is extremely misleading to say the least.

I welcome this opportunity to have my letter published to clarify this issue.

And now, psychedelic sandals

By Jo Aldwinckle
Women's editor

All you need is some acrylic paint and a little imagination to turn your Scholl health sandals into something exclusively "you". Better still if you have an artist in the family.

"Whatever are you trying to do?" Eric Aldwinckle asked when he caught me outlining tulips around the platform soles. "I just had an idea that I could go 'Tiptoe through the tulips'" I replied hopefully. Whereupon he took over.

For anyone with a flair for color, the possibilities are endless. Decorating the sandals may run from a simple paint job to a complete paste-up. What about butterflies to lend wings to your heels?

If you're clever with collage, the button box or jewel box will suggest all sorts of artistic effects. Dime store props can turn the sandals psychedelic and plastic flowers add a costume touch when worn with a lacy pant suit.

This is no ordinary sandal. It is a specially designed beechwood clog with a patented, raised bar which the toes grip naturally while walking. The result is a handsome addition to your foot wardrobe that works while you play.

Walking in the Scholl sandal provides beneficial exercises to the muscles of the feet; strengthening ankles and firming the thighs and calves.

Girls of all ages recognize the remarkable versatility of the sandal. It's a natural for wear with at-home costumes, after-ski clothes, on campus with pants, beach togs and every skirt length from mini to maxi.

The sandal literally works while you play to give your feet and legs a new lease on life and beauty.

I don't know anyone who doesn't enjoy an outdoor market. It's something that has a flavor entirely its own. It brings the atmosphere of the Old World into the New and the sight and scent of Mother Nature's sun-kissed produce warms the senses.

Man's primitive urge is back to the earth and for those who tread the sterile asphalt and live within walls of steel and concrete contact with the man who gazes across orchards of laden fruit trees and bends to the fertile soil, is a re-assurance of springtime and harvest and strength to the spirit.

This is the unseen, unspoken virtue of a farmers' market; the visible and tangible lies in the dewy freshness of the fruit and vegetables, the new-laid eggs and the crusty bread.

Since 1965 Oshawa has had an outdoor farmers' market, held every Friday in the summer months at Oshawa Shopping Centre. Unless the farmers can find another suitable site, it may well be that they will visit us no more.

According to Gus Wagenmakers who trucks his farm produce from Beamsville in the Niagara Peninsula, the increased rent and restrictions are making it impossible for the small operator to exist.

"We started by paying $5 for a stall. In 1968, the rent was doubled and this year we have to pay $15 with no running water or convenience. Several of us require two stalls. That's $30 rent for the day. I have to pay an assistant and it's a long day from 4 a.m. until midnight. Add $15 for gasoline and I've spent about $60 before I've considered the cost of the fruit and the baskets.

"Some farmers come from Hampton and Bowmanville which isn't so far, but they have only a small quantity to sell. One man specializes in cauliflower. He'd have to sell an awful lot to cover his $15 rent.

"In the peak of the season there are 35 to 40 producers which makes a good market. If, one by one, they drop out then it's no good and the rest of us may as well give up.

"This would be too bad for Oshawa because most cities in this part of Ontario have prosperous outdoor markets. St. Catharines market operates three days per week. The stall-holders pay $50 per annum, or $2 per day. In Kitchener there are two markets, two days per week.

In Hamilton we pay $3 per day; Belleville $4; Orillia $2 and the Burlington Market which attracts 40 to 50 trucks, is run by the Lions' Club, one day per week at a cost of $45 per annum each.

"None of these markets impose the restrictions that we find in Oshawa. We are restricted to our own stuff or nothing. Hamilton permits 35 per cent early imported produce to be sold.

"We are not allowed to sell cut flowers, box plants or potted plants, or fruit or vegetables in four-quart baskets."

It sounds as though the farmers are really fed up with the situation, and you couldn't blame them for backing out. I for one, would be sorry to see them go.

Surely there must be a bit of vacant land somewhere in Oshawa, not far from a bus stop, where the farmers could hold their weekly market and the city-dwellers could get back to earth.

Pinewood Derby: it's a joint father-son effort

Sir:

In reference to the "Parent of a disappointed Cub", to answer your last statement first — NO, I definitely do not feel guilty about helping my son with his Pinewood Derby car. It's supposed to be a joint effort. Your letter sounds like so much sour grapes to me — stick around and you'll find out why.

When the first Derby was instigated here five years ago, I was fortunate enough to have a son in cubs and we proceeded to hack and slash away at our block of wood until we had something we thought was presentable.

Came the night of the pack race and we got a look at some of the other entries and wow! — were we outclassed.

At this point I could have gone away and had a good cry, or written a letter to the editor, or done something equally as foolish and useless.

Instead, we took a good look around, asked questions, looked some more and found that maybe we were taking the sketch of the example shown in the rules too literally.

Let's see now — all pieces cut from the lock could be used — hmmm, the axles don't have to be attached where the slots are cut, etc., etc.

Suddenly we found we were doing just what the Pinewood Derby was conceived to make us do — work together. Father and son, planning and working together.

As far as the actual work — shaping, carving, sanding, painting — this makes up a very small percentage of the time we spent together. Most of the time is spent in planning and decision making. Planning what looks better — an open or a closed model, with or without fins, sloped or chopped rear deck, whitewalls or not, yellow, green or blue.

And making earth shaking decisions, such as whether to have freshie or orange juice and if dad should maybe have something added to his orange juice.

This is also a time to introduce your cub to some of the tools he's seen but hasn't been allowed to use — the box plane, the extra sharp chisels, the power drill, jig saw and bench saw. This can be a real fun time.

Professional finishes now come in a can. Our finishes consist of much sanding, more sanding, a little more sanding and coats of paint applied liberally from an aerosol spray can to the car, the workbench, some tools, the cat, the hands — anything within range.

We didn't keep time cards, or punch a clock to see if one of us did more work than the other. What's important is that we both know that it was a joint effort, that each of us had a hand in all phases of building, planning and finishing. We wouldn't have had it any other way.

As to trophies — there can be only so many hardware winners — but if you have participated together then you're a winner, in a much more important way.

As to some fathers doing all the work on the car while their son sits and watches, this may be so in some isolated cases. There are always these unfortunate exceptions to every rule. If such is the case then I feel genuinely sorry for both parties. The cub, because he is missing an opportunity of working with his dad on a project that is theirs and theirs alone. And for the father because he too is missing the chance to work and exchange thoughts and ideas with his son — perhaps to achieve a success now, that eluded him as a child.

But these are not the people the Derby was intended for and they are few and far between.

If you cannot, or don't feel you can spend a lot of time on a model car with your son then forget design. Point your block, sand the wheels, polish and polish the axles, lubricate and test for straightline running. Paint and number your car and you're set. After all, to the cubs, speed's the thing. But, then again, why can't a vehicle that moves fast be attractive to look at as well. To each according to his time allotment — togetherness is the thing.

If you want to find out what this Pinewood Derby exercise is all about, make your next Derby car a real joint project with your cub and you've got to be a winner, 'cause with this attitude there just aren't any losers.

Husband and working wife :

It made her a far better person to live with

What's it like for a wife who works outside of the home? Is her home life neglected? Do the husband and children mind? Does it make her more or less of a woman? This is the second in a series of stories about Oshawa's working wives and mothers.

"Working outside of the home has made me a better person to live with" says Dorothy Whitney.

Dorothy, who has two daughters, Barbara, 21 and Cathy, 18, and husband Dean, works as a sales clerk at Young Moderns, a clothing store in Oshawa.

This particular job she has had for three years. "I had to have something to do" says Dorothy. "I hadn't worked for about nine months and I was anxious to get back. I couldn't stand to stay at home all the time."

Dorothy has been working ever since she was 12 years old. She grew up in Oshawa, went to E. A. Lovell elementary school but didn't make it to high school. "In those days it wasn't easy to be able to afford to go to high school" she says. "My family couldn't afford it, so I went out to work."

Over the years her jobs have ranged from baby-sitting, working at the Regent Theatre, to dry-cleaning. But most of her life, she has been a sales clerk.

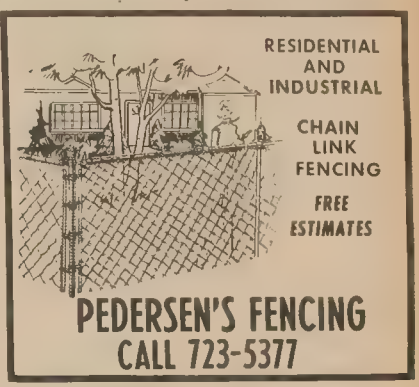
Today Mrs. Whitney doesn't work out of financial necessity, although she finds the money does come in handy. "The money helps us do things and go places we wouldn't normally go." says Dorothy. "It helps buy the luxuries, really. In this day and age, it almost takes two people to be able to afford these things."

But she doesn't work only for the money. "I do it for peace of mind more than anything" she says. "I seemed to have so much extra time on my hands at home and I can't stand sitting around doing nothing. It's nice to get out and meet the public — you meet a lot of interesting people. This way there's never a dull moment."

Dorothy Whitney

Dorothy works a 40 hour week; gets up in the morning at 6:30; does the dishes, makes the beds and does the rest of the housework when she gets home from work.

"My husband usually makes his own breakfast" says Dorothy. "This was his idea though — he doesn't mind at all. as far as the other meals go, I make them myself. I'll prepare them in the morning and then cook them when I get home. I plan meals that are nourishing, filling and easy to get ready. And my husband loves to eat, so there's no skimping here. On my day off and on Sunday I go all out and fuss over meals."



In their spare time, Dorothy and Dean go bowling, dancing, or visiting friends. But they both like to be at home with the family when they can. "I don't belong to a lot of clubs" says Dorothy. "I like to be home with my family in the evenings and I like to be there when they want to talk to me.

"I didn't go to work until the children went to school. And even today I'm a firm believer that mothers should stay at home until their children go to school. They grow up so fast.

"My children don't mind me working. We get along well and they are helpful to me. Besides, I've worked for so long now, they're used to it.

"My husband doesn't object either. He knows I'm not happy staying at home all the time. This is something a husband and wife have to work out between themselves.

"In fact, after I started to work, Dean said I was a far better person to live with."

That lovely patch of green

By Francine Fortier

Ah! What better place could one hot human find to rest his weary bones and eat his lunch, than in a park!

There is a patch of green amidst the hot pavements of downtown Oshawa. And it's to this patch — Memorial Park, that many of Oshawa's noon-hour eaters flock.

Peppering the cool green grass are students, office workers and factory workers, munching on their lunch and thoroughly enjoying the atmosphere.

Propped up underneath the huge shade trees are more "lunch-hourers" sipping their pops and thinking, "Gee it's nice to be out here with Mother Nature."

And then the work gong goes and all the students, office workers and factory workers trudge back to their duties . . . .

Like most mothers, Nature is left with the mess. Now peppering the cool green grass are lunch bags, pizza boxes and candy wrappers.

Propped up underneath the huge shade trees are pop bottles and more lunch bags.

Then another work gong goes and the city parks men arrive on the scene with their pointed sticks to clean up the garbage. And H. Bathe, parks superintendent frantically runs about, tripping over potato chip bags, saying, "Why do they do this?"

"It takes a team of six men" says Bathe, "to clean up this mess. We constantly have to pick up mounds of garbage that is left lying around the park after people eat their lunch here.

"But it doesn't stop there. People purposely turn over the garbage pails so the garbage spills out. They also keep pulling the flowers out the flower beds and we can't plant anymore this year. That's it for this year's flowers."

And just to add insult to injury, "to top it off" says Bathe, "some people are taking the wreaths for the soldiers apart.

"Why do they have to empty the garbage pails? Why do they have to pull the flowers out? Why do they have to take the wreaths apart?"

Upset over train noise

"Some engineers take a delight in blowing whistle"

Jets aren't the only source of noise pollution.

While some Oshawa residents are up in arms over the possibility of an enlarged airport — whether it would bring jets or not — others are balking at the noise trains make.

Ten Jarvis Street residents wrote a blistering anti-noise letter to city council last week.

Vernon and Joyce Osborne of 469 Jarvis Street, and their neighbors put it this way:

"Within the last few months, there has been a decided increase in activity during the day, with prolonged periods of shunting taking place lasting anywhere from fifteen minutes to one and one-half hours per session. During this period conversation outside is an impossibility. Some engineers seem to take a delight in blowing the whistle and ringing the bell for an interminable length of time, even while the train is stationary or travelling away from the intersection.

"We realize this is a part of an active industry, but since September, this operation is continuing through the night and early morning hours, making sleep impossible. During this period, with the roar of an accelerated engine, the crashing of box cars into each other, the squealing of wheels on the rails and the yelling of linesmen back and forth, all this within fifty yards of an open bedroom window, is anything but conducive to sleep. We, in the area, have tried sleeping pills, ear plugs, etc. without success.

"We know these operations must continue through the day, but I'm sure could be carried out with much less disturbance. During the night, surely we could expect seven or eight hours of undisturbed sleep. If we are to be taxed as a residential area, why should we be subjected to industrial noise between the hours of midnight and seven a.m.? We are under the impression that alternate arrangements could be made during night hours."

Oppose airport expansion

President John DeHart of the Oshawa Civic Affairs Committee this week announced plans for a protest meeting in connection with plans to enlarge the Oshawa Municipal Airport.

DeHart said the meeting will be held next Monday at the Credit Union Hall, 322 King Street West.

He said his group is seeking support for a brief to the city's parks, property and recreation committee.

The brief will state objections to what DeHart called "sound pollution." DeHart said his committee feels planning to date in connection with expansion of the airport has been "sheer conjecture and not supported by facts."

Mackey explains mayor's role in modern community the demands made on the mayor, he suggests.

This administrative assistant could enable the mayor to handle more people problems by doing much of the administrative work of the office and doing the type of research into current urban concepts and ideas which must be brought before council if the mayor so deems.

ASISSTANT MAYOR

The executive assistant would also be available to pinpoint the need to develop certain social themes of importance in the community and could help the mayor liaison with the administrative staff so the mayor is not so bogged down in administrative detail at city hall, says Mackey. He suggests that at first this administrative assistant could also serve as secretary to board of control, or the city manager could act as the mayor's assistant. Ideally one person should be permanently assigned as executive assistant to the mayor.

Mackey also suggests that the mayor could call on the public to provide some of the resources he requires to guide the development of the city. Citizens' committees could be established which are responsible to the mayor, who would act as a pipeline to council. These committees could do research work for the mayor in special areas of concern and enable the mayor to be a leader in establishing and solving the needs of the community, the Mayor says.

"Such committees have the added advantage of involving the taxpayer, the interested party, the citizen more closely in the democratic process of running our city," he says.

As Mackey continues to rethink the proper role of the mayor, he also feels that there should be some kind of training for new mayors, prior to their inauguration. Short courses could be offered by the provincial department of municipal affairs or a municipal association that would familiarize the new mayor with what is expected of him and what potential problems may face him when he takes office.

Total involvement key in Appeal

Total involvement.

That's what the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal is looking for.

Ninety heads of industry attended a United Appeal Corporate Seminar at the Crippled Children's School last week to outline plans for the September campaign.

Stirring up a little blood were speakers Terence Kelly, president of the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal and E.R. S. McLaughlin, general campaign chairman.

McLaughlin stressed the theme of total involvement for this year. He pointed out that three requests would be made of the heads of industry in the Oshawa-Whitby area — a request for their personal donation; a request for their corporate gift; and a request that they encourage their employees to participate through payroll deducation — "the best method of assuring a good individual donation in an easy-to-give way."

"Our theme of total involvement" said McLaughlin and Kelly, "means that every citizen in our communities is asked to be involved. We know that industries' three way participation is most important to the continuing effective work of the agencies that share our funds."

As part of this "involvement", the housewife will be included in a house-to-house canvass.

Total disbursements to the 28 agencies that form the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal in 1970 were $452, 790 and the tentative allocation for 1971 is $456,589.

Auditors' reports as of December 31, 1969 indicated a surplus of unappropriated funds of only $43,034. Most United Funds try to have a reserve fund equivalent to ¼ of the total agency allocations. On this basis, the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal should have a reserve fund of $115,000 to meet unforesen emergencies.

The estimated cost of the 1970 campaign including promotional material, publicity, postage, films, slides, etc. is $15,-000.

In 1969, more than 19,-811 citizens and companies pledged to the campaign to produce funds in the amount of $462,087. And in 1970, more than 2,300 citizens will lend their talents on a volunteer basis to manage, promote and collect funds.

The Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal is an incorporated Charitable Company.

Kids' pool runs into snag

Last January Jim Hambly of Coral Swimming Pools figured he had a great idea.

Only since then, a snag has developed.

Here's how it all started: Hambly wanted to build pool for display purses located on his office's property. But at the same time it occurred to him — why not put the pool to good use?

That's when he came up with his idea. He would let Oshawa's crippled children use the pool during the summer months.

He approached Mrs. Katherine Finley of the Crippled Children's school and told her what he had in mind. She was quite enthused about the idea and planned on using the pool for supervised swimming rather than for therapy.

In February he got to work on the pool. Since so many children were going to use it, he made it larger than he had originally planned. At a cost of $13,000 he planned to construct the pool, 25 x 47 feet, heat it, install special steps, a slide, diving board, build change rooms, washrooms, and showers and add other special fixtures.

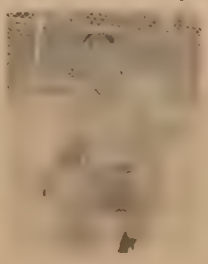
The pool was poured. The cement set.

And then the monkey wrench. Hambly went to see about getting a sign for his setup and the City told him — sorry, you can't operate your business there. The city informed Hambly the land he was occupying was a buffer area and only cerain types of businesses were allowed to operate from there — Hambly's wasn't one of them.

Hambly was told he would have to move.

What will happen to his $13,000 project?

If Hambly is allowed to stay, the swimming pool will remain — swimming pools can be built in this area.



If he isn't allowed to stay the fate of the pool is dubious. Considering the pool is meant for the dual purpose of display Hambly would like it adjacent to his business. And if the present pool has to be removed he will have lost over $9,000.

And the crippled children will have lost a pool to swim in for the summer.

Hambly is waiting for the City's next move.

Jim Hambly pours water into the swimming pool he is building for crippled children.

Mary Street elementary school doesn't want many of its students to feel left out.

That's why they work as a team. A tabloid meet is coming up on June 19 and there won't be anyone there who isn't involved. All the events will be entered not by individuals but by teams.

This way everyone will have a chance to do their best and to share their enjoyment with their classmates.

Jim McMillan's grade five class is giving a sample (see pictures) of what they have planned for the tabloid meet.

Opens beauty salon

By JO ALDWINCKLE
Women's Editor

Eugenie Martin was first attracted to Oshawa by the friendliness of the people she met here. She came to Canada from England four years ago and has been managing a hair-dressing salon in Toronto.

"The attitude is not the same there," she said in her very soft voice. "I don't need to explain, except to say, that intentionally or unintentionally, people can be cruel.

"I am a member of Club Carib here, and what those people are doing for human relationships is simply wonderful. I am living in Bay Ridges at present but I hope to come and live in Oshawa. I have heard about the Folk Festival and the July 1 parade and events. This is what I admire. People really touch hands and touch hands and touch hands."

Eugenie opened her hair-dressing salon Coiffeurs Caribiennes, 262 King Street East, last Wednesday.

"This is a modest, neighborhood salon and beauty parlor," she said, "but I am anxious to establish a personal, reliable service." Eugenie holds diplomas from two well-known training schools in London, England, Mavi's School of Hairdressing and Beauty Culture and Wella School of Hair Waving and Hair Coloring.

Beside this she is the only exponent of permanent hair relaxing in Oshawa. Hair relaxing is the professional term for straightening rizzy hair.

Records in review

About the music I will be reviewing, all I can say, finally, is 'buy it' or 'don't'. Music is a separate experience and the less said about it, the more time there is to listen to it. So these reviews will not be comprehensive, authoritative, or the final word. Just reactions. Mine. Add what you want. Believe it or ignore it. Most of all it's just advice.

Paul Grady

Review of "Tom Rush" Columbia CS997

The following paragraph appears on the back of an early Tom Rush album:

"There is no superficiality in Rush's music, no mere stylistic trappings concealing an emotional void. Rush goes to the heart of the matter in his performances, selecting classics from a repertoire that is among the most remarkable of any urban folksinger. Few can match his exciting and varied singing. His guitar playing is uniformly brilliant."

To which few reviewers can add much but I'll say a bit about his latest album anyway — the purple one called "Tom Rush". To his basic acoustic rhythm guitar, electric lead and electric bass, he brings in, variously, organ, dobro, steel guitar and a small stringed orchestra. An impressive list, but the album retains the virtue of simplicity. The songs are never over-done.

The songs themselves reach out with down-to-earth images and themes. 'Child's Song' will touch most of the denizens of Yorkville, Haight-Ashbury and any kid who has had to leave home. It's about loving your parents when it's difficult. Rush includes two songs from Jackson Browne and one from James Taylor.

The music of Tom Rush spans across people from the 20's the 30's the 40's right up to now. Dad, if you see your son's purple album called Tom Rush lying around sometime, sneak it on. Next time you might be listening to it together.

Spinner's World at the art gallery

By Paul Bennett, Director.

Last night the Honourable Michael Starr opened the Exhibition "A Spinner's World" at the Robert McLaughlin Gallery.

This handsome show has been produced by the Hiawatha Spinners of Oshawa and District, and has been co-ordinated by Mrs. Esther Bryant. This small, but active, group of spinners have produced forty pieces of woven materials for the exhibition from handspun, nature dyed wool. Nature dye is made by the spinners out of roots of plants, leaves, flowers and bark of trees. This group pride themselves on doing all of these processes from the raw material to the finished product. There are spinning wheels, a spinning chair, a skeiner, iron pots for dyeing etc., on display at the Gallery.

On Friday and Saturday, the Hiawatha Spinners are going to host the 1970 Ontario Handspinning Seminar at the Gallery. The programme starts at 9.30 a.m. There will be workshops, discussions, a business meeting, talk on sheep husbandry and demonstrations. From 7 to 9 p.m. on the Friday evening, there will be a special programme for the Open House. The President's Committee of the Gallery are hosting the two noon day luncheons.

Mrs. Bryant and her group should be congratulated on their ambitious undertaking in bringing this Seminar, with its participants from all over Ontario and the United States, to Oshawa.

In the large Gallery during this period there will be hanging an Exhibition called "American Art Through Posters". This comes from the National Gallery and features artists such as Helen Frankenthaler, Jackson Pollock, Andy Warhol and Jim Dine.

Gallery Hours:- Monday to Friday — 12 - 5 p.m.; Evenings — 7 - 9 p.m.; Saturday — 10 - 5 p.m.; Sunday — 12 - 5 p.m.

Concerts resume

The Oshawa Civic Band will commence its 29th summer series of Band Concerts from the McLaughlin Band Shell in Memorial Park, Thursday evening, June 18 at 8.30.

"The Horseless Carriagement" Barbershop Chorus will be the guest artists on this occasion.

The band, under the direction of Captain George Quick, will feature Friedman's "Slavonic Rhapsody" and Rossini's Overture "Tancredi". Among the lighter numbers will be selections from "Finians Rainbow", "76 Trombones" from the Music Man; a Trombone solo, Trumpet Trio and Xylophone Solo.

Master of Ceremonies will be Don Allman.

AIRPORT EXTENSION PLANS

In response to many requests, this association is endeavoring to assemble information on this project and the effect that such a programme might have upon the citizens of Oshawa.

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

If all the predictions about the future of television come true half of the existing stations in the world will cease to exist. This could be very pleasant indeed. Large transmitters and those garish cloud bumping antennae will be sold for scrap as the new form of transmission takes over. Cable networks will string their wire from coast to coast till every small burg and megalopolis is wired for reception. Along with the cable, broadcast stations will spring up to supply broadcasting of the area.

The name of this new use for TV is called Local Origination and come hell or rusty antennaes, the Canadian Radio and Television Commission is bound to make it happen.

It makes good sense. Just as the local newspapers and radio stations cover events of local interest so will the television station begin to inform.

But don't expect EMMY winning shows overnight. It takes a long time for any new newspaper or radio station to perform like a team and television is no exception. But it will come with time and it will form an important part of the local gentries source of information.

Cablecast 8 is doing such a job now. Starting last January with a news, sports and weather broadcast from a small studio — 3 by 8 feet to be exact — and with an industrial type of camera, it branched out to a larger studio with proper studio cameras and fixed if not flexible schedules. The original programming for January was half an hour. Now Cablecast 8 is up to an average of five hours per day and even has the distinction of having regular weekly shows.

On Tuesdays Hans Haagmans, a local travel agent takes the viewer on trips around the world via slides, film and always with a guest who is in the know. Wednesday the Department of Labour, Manpower branch puts out a half an hour of information on the labor scene, from how to get retraining to what jobs are available. Thursday the show called Cable Ease with Madge Crichton looks at the world of women

Tucked away in the future show files are specials on local events, persons, and historical things and a talk show to be handled by the editor of This Week, Peter Brouwer.

Legion honors long-service members

At Saturday night's dinner at the Legion Hall, 38 members of Branch 43 were called to receive their 25-year membership pins, the largest group to date in the history of Branch 43. Also honored were eight 30-year members, five 35-year members and 16 40-year (life) members.

The large number of 25-year members recalled the fact that toward the end of of 1945 Canadians on active service were being repatriated from the European theatres of war. Their membership in the Legion kept them in touch with their wartime buddies and helped them bridge the gap into civvy street.

Following the presentation of the colors led by pipers and a drummer and the sounding of the Last Post, the Padre, the Reverend Alfred Woolcock prayed for the living and the dead, with special mention of the late Grand President, Royal Canadian Legion, the Hon. J. Keiller Mackay and the late Lyman Gifford, former mayor of Oshawa.

President Ontario Command Doug. McDonald presented the 25-year and 40-year pins; Keith Ferguson, zone commander, the 30-year pins and Eric Hogg, district commander, the 35-year pins assisted by William H. Langton, decorations chairman.

A standing ovation was accorded Ada Twilley Parks, only woman 25-year member, and Alex Walker Senior and Alex Walker Junior. Another father and son team was recognized when Frank Davey received his 40-year button from his son.

Doug McDonald, congratulating all, introduced Ben Jacklin and George Morgan, 44-year members Paul Swartz and Bill Beaton, 42-year members.

A presentation was made by Maurice Proctor to Robert Williams and Jack Hodgson for their success as canvassers for the Poppy Fund.

President-elect Luke E. White proposed a toast to the City of Oshawa to which Alderman Gordon Attersley replied on behalf of the mayor. President Albert Turner responded to the toast to Branch 43 and the 25-year members, proposed by Eric Hogg, district commander and Grace Brown, president of the Ladies Auxiliary, replied to the toast to the Auxiliary, proposed by James Seaver, Branch treasurer.

Oshawa's Horseless Carriagemen, wearing high-buttoned russet suits, yellow gloves and straw boaters, entertained with barbership harmonies of old favorites, including "Ain't She Sweet" by the quartette.

To bring the festive evening to a close members of the auxiliary provided a variety show of skits, dances and good old-fashioned fun.

Legion Auxiliary has 25-year dinner

Zone Commander Gertie Williams and President Grace Brown, Ladies Auxiliary of Branch 43 Royal Canadian Legion, presented 25, 30 and 35-year membership pins at the annual 25-year dinner last week.

Officers of Branch 43 were present and President Albert Turner replied to the toast to the branch, thanking the auxiliary for its steadfast support.

Mrs. Alyn Elliott proposed the toast to the provincial command and in her reply, Mrs. Robert Williams noted that after ten years as zone commander this would be her last official duty in that office.

Mrs. Ray Boivin proposed the toast to all long service members and Mrs. Edward Maidman replied.

In a brief business meeting the charter was draped in memory of the late Roberta Maiel. The auxiliary will make its annual visit to Sunnybrook Hospital, Wednesday June 17 to distribute treats and comforts to veterans.

The summer outing is planned for June 25, a picnic at Port Perry, July 12 and the pre-Christmas bazaar, November 17.

The Oshawa Chapter Sweet Adelines, led by Daphne Longworth and Pat Weggler, were warmly received for the close-harmony singing. Their program included "My Wild Irish Rose", "Tumbledown Shack in Athlone", "So Tired of Waiting for You" and "Give My Regards to Broadway". The Short Notes quartette sang "Shine on Harvest Moon" and the chorus concluded with "Sound of Music", "Winchester Cathedral" "South Rampart Street Parade" and "The Trolley Song".

Twenty-one prizes were presented with Bessie Brown the auxiliary's oldest member (90 in August) winning the first draw.

College president sees big increase in fall enrollment

Durham College faces a substantial increase in enrollment this fall, according to Dr. Gordon Willey, president of Durham College, at the Community Colleges conference last week in Hamilton.

Ontario Education Minister William Davis predicts that the Ontario Colleges expect 36,000 students enrolled, compared to the present enrollment of 28,000.

Willey said the conference pointed to increasing cooperation among the community colleges and the universities, coordinating courses and sharing facilities where applicable. He emphasized that the colleges will have to achieve optimum efficiency in their operations, inasmuch as they face a period where tax sources of income will be limited, but expansion problems will continue. "In solving this problem, we will have to be more selective in enrollment, and avoid a needless proliferation of courses',, he said.

Jobs?

Susan Shields, 15, grade 11, Oshawa Catholic High, "I don't have a job. I went to the employment agency and put my name in at a couple of stores. I would like a job because otherwise it will be a boring summer — there won't be anything to do all the time."

Larry Hilts, 18, grade 13, Central Collegiate, "I don't have a job. I want and need a job. I've been looking all over and there's nothing around. I don't know what to do if I don't get a job. How am I going to get my money? — That's a problem.'

Norman Toulouse, 18 —, grade 10, Eastdale Collegiate and Vocational Institute, "I have a job with a 'chip' truck this summer. I wanted the job because I needed the money. I didn't put my name in at Manpower because I figured I'd try to find one on my own first."

Mary Lous Clancy, 17, grade 11, Oshawa Catholic High, "I'll be working at my dad's office this summer. I'll be doing clerical work, only part time though. I'm not looking for a full time job — I don't really need any money."

Diane Nadeau, 16, grade 10, McLaughlin Collegiate and Vocational Institute, "I've got a job at a shoe store this summer — I've had it now for a month and a half. I wanted a job this summer to pass the time away."

John Burkitt, 18, grade 11, Monarch Park secondary school in Toronto, "No, I'm not looking for a job this summer. It doesn't matter to me in particular if I have one or not. I'll just go and hang around at the beach instead."

Terry Stone, 17, grade 10, McLaughlin Collegiate and Vocational Institute, "I have a job working at the lunch counter at the Jubilee Pavilion for the summer. I wanted a job because I need the money.

Sandy Johnson, 16, grade 11, Oshawa Catholic High, "All I'll be doing for work this summer is babysitting. I need the money but I'm not interested in a job."

Chronicles of Osh

1. And it came to pass on the second day of the third week of the sixth month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy that the elders of the land of Osh gathered in the Temple of Osh which stood four square upon pillars in the heart of the land of Osh.

2. And before the elders there were many trialettes and tribulettes which were the ones that were of a nature that was minor.

3. As there were:

4. The wherewithall and whatwithall by which the people of the land of Osh and the healers and those who visited the sick, and those who labored on the great tent of healing in the land of Osh should tie up their camels in that part of the land of Osh that was between the heart of the land and the hills and valleys where the rich men of Osh swung woods and irons to drive from one place to another a ball.

5. As there were also the wherewithall of the eighty one pieces of oasis in the land of Osh which the angel of works that were public had named sacs.

6. Now the sacs of the land of Osh were those parts of the land that were owned by the land so to speak, and on which the canines of the land of Osh were the only ones to have squatters rights (And did they squat!)

7. And among the people of the land of Osh who, like any other people were divided in two races — those who liked canines and those who didn't — well, among the Oshites there were many who protested in loud voices and said squatting, though to no avail.

8. And while this thing of the squatting of the canines of the land of Osh had come before the elders of the land of Osh on previous occasions, as a manner of speaking, on this the second day of the third week of the sixth month of that year, it was not the squatting of the canines that called for the judgement of the wise men and women of Osh, but it was the color of these places called sacs.

9. For amongst the elders there was a move afoot, to apply this thing called austerity to the sacs of the land of Osh and to have the men of the city who walked with long blades, use their blades instead of twelve times in a year, six times, thus saving the people of the land of Osh who all in one accord paid for the cutting of the sacs, a few bucks.

10. And the elder Humph arose in the chamber of the Temple of Osh and girded his loins, and spoke in a voice of determination saying, ye men of Osh we have arrived at a new height at which the grass on the sacs of Osh shall be deemed properly trimmed. And that height, spoke the elder Humph, was between six and nine inches.

11. And the elder Fin arose, without girding anything and spoke, saying, let it grow. Why should we cut it? Moreover did he speak, saying, behold, I, Fin of Osh cut my own and others should do likewise.

12. And there were some words between the elders of Osh as to who among them should take on the cutting of the greens of the sacs of Osh, and Pilkal the youngest among the elders of Osh arose, saying, we elders of works will in no way take away from the elders and the angels and henchmen of parks that are green.

13. And Charles the Physician among the elders arose and lifted up his voice and said, behold we should spread asphalt on the sacs of Osh, and follow each spreading with a liberal sprinkling of green. And there were some among the elders who said amen.

14. And the blonde

HOSS' HORSES

by Ross Hoss

"They're off!"

In another few days, these words will echo at Woodbine for the running of this year's Queen's Plate. The affair will take place on June 20 over 1¼ miles of dirt.

The favorite will probably be Two Violins, who has yet to lose a race this year. Two Violins won his first two races this year by 17 and 12 lengths respectively. Armstrong is the jockey and Lou Cavalaris is the trainer of Two Violins. With this one-two punch, Two Violins may get the job done.

The only question is, Can Two Violins go a distance?. His breeding would give us a negative answer. Neither his sire nor his dam were noted as being distance horses. The fact is that nobody really knows how good Two Violins is. We'll all find out on June 20 at Woodbine.

My choice for the Plate will have to be Croquemitaine, ridden by Oshawa's Sandy Hawley. This horse won very convincingly on the grass recently, beating Dance to Market and Tudor Queen. I would say this horse is in top shape now and could easily beat Two Violins. Sandy Hawley will certainly be trying for his first Plate win

Below are my graded selections for the Plate on June 20:

Croquemitaine — Can now take it all.

Two Violins — Will battle wire to wire.

Dance to Market — Could win it off best.

Middle Sue Escar — Will be knocking.

Dauntless Spirit — Closes well at times.

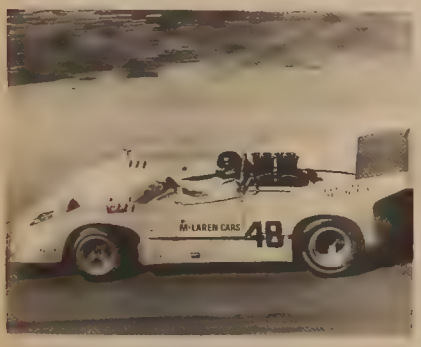
Bees Wax — Vastly underated.

Almoner — Would pay a price if in.

Vice Regent — From a good barn.

Sir Montague — Has been coughing lately.

Mildenhall — Good reports in morning only.



Kimberlite — Not this trip.

I'm sure everybody is glad Sandy Hawley decided to ride in Canada for another year. Sandy was compared to Willie Shoemaker by one of the top trainers in the United States this past spring. Quite a compliment! This lad can do no wrong on the track and when his mounts do run out of the money, you can be sure the horse is not in condition. A lot of people thought Sandy would taper off when he lost his apprentice allowance but he still wins as many as anybody else.

Next year, Sandy Hawley will probably go to the States to ride for the full year. The purses there are much richer and a top rider of his calibre can earn a small fortune in a year of racing. Sandy did quite well while in Florida last winter, winning top hockey honors at Gulfstream Park. This was while competing with the top riders in the United States, so this was quite a feat for Sandy.

Hats off to the Jockey Club for providing motorized carts and drivers for the crowds on Queens Plate day at Woodbine! The carts deliver you from the parking lot right to the main gate. No cost to the public! Better still, leave your car at home on Plate day, and take the bus. The traffic is terrible near the entrance and exits of Woodbine.

In closing, I will offer a suggestion. Don't forget what I told you earlier about Croquemitaine. He'll be there. Also ,if any of you racing fans have any questions, feel free to write me c/o this column. Your questions and my answers will appear in this feature. See you at the Plate!

THIS SPORTING LIFE

By Al Mack

Nice warm weather we're having . . . a good time to talk about ice, perhaps? (No, sir or madam, as the case may be, not the ice in your glass — you know more about that than anyone).

Talking of ice, then, let's cast our memories back to the last hockey season, you know, the Year of Bobby Orr.

And the Playoffs of Bobby Orr.

Sportswriters, even the anti-Bruin contingent, were rightly lavish in their praise of this hockey genius, and reasonably fulsome in the credit given to his teammates.

But the sports scribes, to use their own term for themselves, whether they were pro-Boston or not, continued to ignore one of the worst features of National Hockey League matches, especially play-off games:

The officiating.

Now, I have a certain sympathy with sports officials. Theirs is essentially a thankless task, calling for split-second decisions. I doubt that there will ever be a "perfect" game called, perfect in that both teams are satisfied, all the fans are satisfied, and even the officials are satisfied that they didn't even miss one little trick unobserved by everyone but the culprit himself.

(There may have been one such match: A friend of an English soccer referee is recorded as telling the official what an excellent game he had seen one Saturday. The official replied, "I know, I was the referee." To which the friend replied, "That's the mark of a great referee: when no one notices he's even there.")

In the hectic pace of games, especially hockey, lacrosse and football, where breathers are few and far between, unlike baseball, it is completely understandable that infractions will go unnoticed. I personally think that if an official "catches" between 50 and 75 per cent of all infringements in a hockey, lacrosse or football game, he is doing an above average job.

But what gets my back up, especially when seasoned sports reporters and broadcasters (who are well aware of the facts) deliberately avoid commenting on it, are those instances when officials do not call major infractions — often occurring right in front of their very eyes — and call, often seconds later, very questionable "infractions".

These instances often occur when one team is obviously superior to its opposition. Perhaps the officials are merely trying to even things up by handicapping — in both the true and sporting sense — the better team.

This was apparently the case in the NHL finals. Time and again, Bobby Orr was dragged to the ice, high-sticked, held, and tripped. Rarely, if ever, were St. Louis Blues penalized. Several times, William Tredwell (728-7328 daytime or 728-0613 evenings) without delay.

Majorettes on parade will include the Harmanettes; the Barbourettes of Port Perry; Woodview; Harvey Dance Academy; Burns School of Dancing.

As soon as the parade enters Alexandra Park a band concert will begin and will play before and after the flag-raising and opening ceremonies. A sports program has been arranged by Charles Pell and his assistant Glenn Welch of the Oshawa Recreation Department, with demonstrations of Judo (Black Belt); Aikido; Kurati; Yoga and gymnastics. There will be a demonstration of fencing by candidates for the British Empire Games; running races for boys and girls; jogging for the adults and boxing for juniors in all five weights with trophies for the competitive sports.

There will be all kinds of games and stunts; Bingo under the trees; Car Bang; Dunking; a White Elephant sale; a Junior Fashion Show; and a hunt for Mr. X the mystery man with a $25 reward on his head.

There will be Continental Kitchens offering savory fare prepared by the Ukrainian Ladies' Auxiliary; St. Hedwig's Ladies' Society; Club Carib; Loreley Club; also hotdogs, candy floss and potato chips. Mrs. Ed. Budkowski in in charge and vice-president Frank M. Smith is chairman of special events and properties.

St. John Ambulance will be on duty.

Vice-president Tony Castaldo is arranging a program of musical entertainment, rock folk and national groups, baton twirlers and bands and the popular square dancers.

After a supper recess between 5 and 7 p.m. the scene of activity will be at the bandshell in Memorial Park where the International Scout Band will give a concert to be followed by a street dance, square, round and rock on Metcalfe Street.

This is Oshawa's big day and thanks to hundreds of volunteer helpers and participants and to Oshawa City Council the parade, admission to the park and street dance is all free.

questionable calls were handed out against Boston. I cite the St. Louis-Boston series only because it is the most recent. But this has happened many, many times over many, many years in both league and playoff games, and has involved every team in the NHL.

The NHL governors, in their wisdom, should direct that if all infractions are to be called, then they should be called without bias. If some infractions should not be called, in their opinion, then those "infractions" should be stricken from the rule book. It's their league, their teams, their business. They can do with it what they please. But they should play the "game" to the extent that fans know where they're at.

As long as unfair tactics are tolerated on the part of any team in any sport, that sport is not a "sport".

I do not charge the NHL officials with incompetence, although to an uneducated observer that would appear to be the obvious cause of such bad calls. It would be incompetence of such a high degree that if it existed in business, the perpetrator would be fired on the spot.

No, it is not incompetence.

But it is bias.

And I blame this bias not on the officials, but on the men for whom the officials are the hired agents: the NHL board of governors.

among the women of Osh arose, saying this thing of keeping the eighty sacs of Osh trim and tidy was costing the people of the land of Osh twenty five thousand bucks per annum. And she spoke saying, let us heap stones upon these sacks of OSH.

15. And one of the elders whispered unto another, saying, behold the land of Osh should bring in from afar more canines for squatting purposes. And there were others who said goats should be brought to the land of Osh.

16. And of all these things the Chronicler of Osh took due note, for he had an uncle in the livestock business.

Longer grass loses

Oshawa has 81 blind alleys that cost city taxpayers $25,000 a year to keep trim.

A blind alley is the plain word for cul-de-sac (streets open at only one end).

Alderman John Humphreys in a report from the Works Committee told city council Monday his people had been considering a grass height of six to nine inches as acceptable. This would cut down considerably on the number of times city crews would be out to mow the grass, he explained.

Thus far the grass of the city's 81 cul-de-sacs has been cut 12 times a year, and Controller Margaret Shaw told council Monday the cost of that was $25,000.

Controller C. E. McIlveen suggested Humphreys' six to nine inches of grass would bring on "hayfields" and suggested instead "let's asphalt them and paint them green."

Controller Finlay Dafoe suggested the people who live on a cul-de-sac do the cutting of the city owned land themselves. "Nobody cuts my grass for me," he commented.

Controller Shaw suggested stones instead of asphalt.

City council decided to leave things as they were.

It opens the door to industry: McIlveen

Few facts available at ratepayers meeting

AIRPORT BOOST DRAWS PROTEST

Controller C. E. McIlveen, chairman of the Parks, Property and Recreation Committee, says expansion of the Oshawa Airport could open the door to "prestige industry" to settle in the area of the existing airport.

As the airport is situated at present, and without an expansion of runway facilities "it itsn't really doing us too much good", the property chairman said.

He said there are no definite plans for airport expansion at the present time, but "we have some assurance that we can buy the airport from the Department of Transport at its book value ($56,000) and that they will in turn invest that amount in expansion of the runway". To get additional funds for airport expansion, Oshawa would then go on a list of smaller airports such as Peterborough, Kingston, Calgary and await its turn whenever funds would become available.

The area north of Taunton Road should be zoned as an exhibition site, McIlveen said, and this would be a complementary utilization of the land adjacent to the airport.

McIlveen pointed out that Downsview airport is scheduled to be phased out, that the DeHavilland Aircraft Co. employs 400 men there, and that "there is quite a possibility".

McIlveen said his committee is awaiting comments from the Harbor Commission and the Industrial Commission as to the long term effects of airport expansion on the city's economy.

He also pointed out that an extension of the east-west runway from 3,800 to 5,000 feet would "definitely not increase noise pollution".

McIlveen said personally he would "naturally like to see the airport located eight miles outside the city limits". However, he added, the Department of Transport would never go for that.

McIlveen said an expanded airport, in his opinion, would be of great benefit to the city.

Sheila wins contest

THE WINNER: Sheila Thibodeau, 21, is Oshawa's 1970 Rose Festival Queen. Sheila, of 80 Rowe Street, is a housewife. She'll be heading the July 1 parade next Wednesday on behalf of the Oshawa Folk Arts Council. Sheila was the choice from 10 contestants in contest, judged by the readers of THIS WEEK. She wins $100.

Expand Oshawa Airport?

Not on your life, voted about 40 residents of the airport area in a show of hands at a meeting Monday, called by the Oshawa Civic Affairs Association.

But why not, and what kind of expansion, and when and how was not made too clear at the meeting.

More than half a dozen homeowners at the meeting voted to do away with the airport completely.

Noise levels, jet ports, DC 8's, Harvards, Beech 18's, turbo-props, soaring decibels and one citizen quoting a number of very unpolitical quotes by a department of transport official passed the revue.

John Dehart, a candidate in the mayoralty last time around, was chairman of the public meeting. Dehart said he had been approached by "many citizens" in connection with increased activity at the airport.

The city fathers, Dehart said, are spending thousands of dollars in the name of recreation and they are now subjecting us to high levels of noise and air pollution. "It's hard to hear the television when a plane is flying over."

Two years ago complaints about increased airport noise brought relief, Dehart said, but in the past 12 months it has been worse than it was before.

Dehart cited more horsepower in the planes of today as responsible for the higher level of noise pollution. "And the public has not been informed about plans to expand the airport," he added.

Dehart spoke of devaluation of residential property in the airport neighborhood, "many acres tied up that cannot be developed because of the airport" and the noise damage to people's health.

Nearly all residents who spoke at the meeting failed to identify themselves when speaking. One resident claimed he had been assured by a department of transport official by the name of Mr. Stoner that "Oshawa will never be more than an executive jet airport."

Secretary Griffith of the Oshawa Civic Affairs Committee told the gathering the old four-engine planed will be phased out and replaced by DC 8's and 707's as a matter of economics. And therefore

Mayor on future of the area

"It's a fight against urban overcrowding"

How effective are all these new regional government structures in their solutions to urban problems?

Have the larger municipal governments been given sufficient power to cope with their new responsibilities?

Can we continue to administer large urban regions using concepts developed in the middle of the last century?

How will the increasing size of large urban regions affect smaller urban centres and the economic and social life of the surrounding areas?

What will be the consequence of the new form of citizen participation and the emergence of new pressure groups?

Mayor Bruce Mackey raised these questions last week on a visit to Ajax and left his audience to seek out the answers.

The mayor felt the above stated problems can be solved, but only if Oshawa and its neighbors pull together, pool their resources, so they will be assured of a future government that is a relevant body, organized to best solve their problems.

Discussing the current massive study and plan-

Keeping the peace in the 70's

"Police department like a big wheel , everyone is a spoke and we all do share to keep wheel moving"

As Oshawa enters the ranks of the larger cities, the Oshawa police department wants to be prepared to cope with the social problems that accompany size.

One of the most vital features of the police force of the future is a new police building equipped with the most up-to-date communications equipment.

Police Chief Jon Jenkins expects construction of the new building — to be located on Church St. between William and Richmond — to start in September. This would mean that the attractive, functional building will be completed early in 1972.

"It's going to mean that we can operate as a far more efficient police force," explains Jenkins. "To have the most effective department, you have to have the most efficient equipment and facilities."

The heart of the new police building will be the modern communications centre equipped with closed-circuit television and multi-frequency radio equipment. Closed-circuit television will be installed in the cells and at some of the entrances to the building.

The $3 million project will feature the latest in recording and filing systems, condensing the files and centralizing all the information. Instead of finding spare corners for the dead records and filling up boxes and filing cabinets with old files, all the files from more than 10 years back will be stored on microfilm. At the present time records dating back to over 25 years ago are stored in various areas around the police station on Queen Street.

Jenkins has found that municipalities of similar size which have adopted the microfilm filing system can get 10 years of records into only one filing cabinet.

To make the central filing system workable in a large busy building, a conveyor system for transferring information to and from the central files will be installed.

LOOK AHEAD

"We've got to look ahead," says the Chief. "We can't stand still. We can't be content to keep on as we are doing today. Service requires and demands far more than that."

The new station, which at peak will be able to accommodate 250 personnel, should suffice the city until approximately 1984, the chief projects, based on predicted growth rates.

For years now the 113-man police force has been cramped into the small station built in the early 50's. "I guess we had lots of room in this building when it was first built," says Jenkins. "And you can't blame the people who built it for not planning." The present police station was built on the basis of projected population growth based on the rate of growth at that time.

"The increase was far more than they could have predicted," explains Jenkins. He is determined not to repeat the same mistakes in the new police building. This one is going to be constructed in such a way that 18,000 square feet can be added when needed.

Although the present police station is quite cramped, Jenkins feels the force can get by until the new building is completed.

Chief Jon Jenkins

The new building will be suitable for regional headquarters if the regional planning people decided to locate the regional police headquarters in Oshawa, he says. But a new building alone is not going to equip the Oshawa police force on top of the situation.

TRAINING

Jenkins has introduced an in-service training program to keep the officers up-to-date in every new aspect of police service. The new program started off with lectures in public relations, community relations, and report writing.

Jenkins is emphatic that all officers should write up their reports at the scene of an accident, instead of driving back to the station to do this. By writing their reports while at the accident, he says, they are more likely to include all details, so we don't have to send another officer back later to get the information not included in the report.

Even more important, however, is the fact that the patrol car is out in the city instead of sitting in front of the station. "Every car sitting in the streets is a positive deterrent to motorists and to contemplating some crime," says the Chief. "We're more interested in how many people we stop than in how many charges are laid."

The training program will also help Chief Jenkins acquaint his men with how he wants things done. "No two chiefs do things the same way." he says, noting that there have been four chiefs in the last eight years.

The officers have also been exposed to a film on the Woodstock, New York, peace festival which was attended by some 300,000 people last summer. "It is very important for the officers to know what to expect if something like this ever came our way," says Jenkins.

Although a festival may last officially only three days, people start arriving days before and don't leave immediately after. Although provincial police are responsible for controlling any peace festival held in Ontario this year, Chief Jenkins was relieved the one originally planned at Mosport was cancelled.

YOUTH BUREAU

The youth bureau will be the fastest growing division of the Oshawa force in the next few years, the chief reports.

The main problem is the widening use and acceptance of drugs by teenagers. In fact the three man — one woman department will soon require a fulltime drug man, he says. "Even a year ago, we rarely heard of teenagers using drugs," says Chief Jenkins. Drug charges against adults are extremely rare.

"I don't know whether the older ones are getting smarter or the pushers are looking to the younger ones," says Jenkins. "I don't think there is anything lower than to start a child on drugs.

"I call it murder on the installment plan.

"Children don't know what it can do. It can affect everybody differently. LSD is a very vicious drug," he comments.

The Oshawa police department is increasing its educational program of drug information and will speak to anyone anywhere who wants to listen, the Chief explains. "If we can save just one child, it's worth it."

To date officers have spoken at many schools, not only in Oshawa but in the surrounding area as far away as Lindsay. Church groups, and service clubs also often invite a representative of the police force to speak on the subject.

"Our people have to be dedicated, if not there is no use trying to help," he says. The city's youth bureau is comprised of very dedicated people, he says. "All they talk is drugs."

Education is a first priority in an effort to prevent many children from turning to drugs. "Arrest is a last resort. If we spent as many hours arresting people as we do talking to people about drugs, we'd triple our arrest record," he says.

TEENAGER ON TRIP

When a police officer finds a teenager on a trip, he does everything possible to assist him and makes sure he gets proper medical care either at the hospital or at a doctor's. After the youngster is being treated by a qualified physician, the police officer notifies the parents what has happened and often this is the first time the parent realizes that his child is on drugs. "Everyone feels that it couldn't happen to them," says Chief Jenkins.

Thirdly, the police department sees that every available assistance is given to get the user on the fight to recovery, even though this may involve psychiatric treatment.

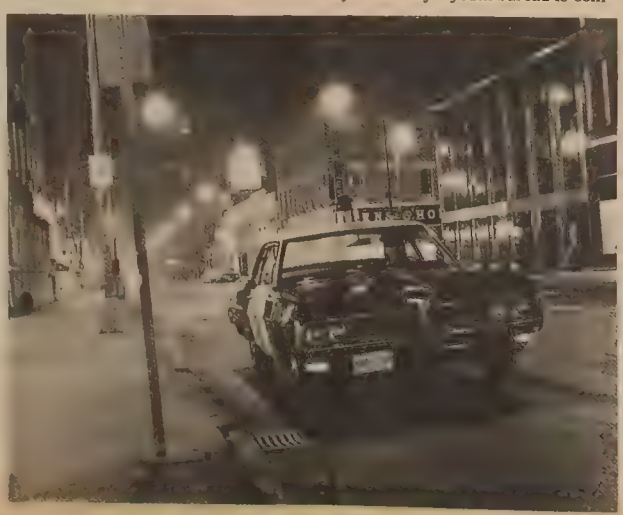
"It is a pitiful sight to see a young person under the influence of drugs," says the Chief.

"And you can't pick out any segment of society that uses drugs more than any other," he says. "We were looking for some direction, some pattern to steer us, and we found that drug use was spread across all ethnic groups all geographical areas of the city and all salary scales.

"Ninety percent of the people in Oshawa get drugs for nothing," he says, through drug insurance plans, often paid for by the employer. "Some doctors are too damn quick to give you pills," he says.

Parents don't hesitate to take a pill for anything that's bothering them. "How can we expect our kids to do much else?" Chief Jenkins asks.

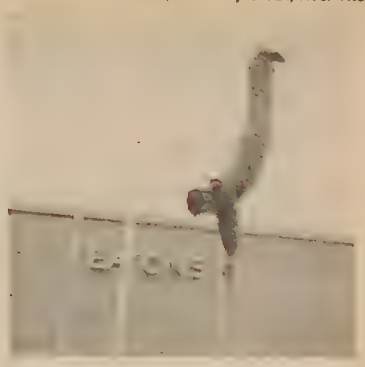
Frauds are another area of emphasis in the Oshawa department. "Frauds are on the increase and it's a pretty lucrative business for a criminal," says the chief. Here again the police concentrate on educating the public to be wary of frauds and do a lot of talking at service clubs and banks. All bank employees get special instructions from the police department about what credentials to request when presented with a check.



"BAD BUSINESS"

"Fraud is a pretty mean type of crime," says Chief Jenkins. The old and sick and weak are preyed on as well as the average family. Some business operations draw a very fine line between a legitimate business and a fradulent one.

For example, some driveway paving operations are suspect. They pave a couple of driveways on your street and then go around to the rest of the people in the neighborhood, he says. They give you such a good price that it's hard to turn down. You sign a contract and give them a down payment and they give you a receipt with only a telephone number on it, and tell you they'll be back in a couple of days to do your driveway.



Then they take off for the next town. When you call the number to

He's flying and diving in order to fly

Don Webb is trying to fly to Scotland the hard way. Crowds of people watched Webb at the Oshawa Shopping Centre Saturday as he demonstrated his "diving" prowess. Webb is coach of the Oshawa Aquatic Club and is trying his hardest to get to the Commonwealth Games in Edinborough in two weeks. Beverly Boys, Nancy Robertson, and Bob Eaton, all of the Oshawa Aquatic Club will be participating in these games and Webb wants to be there too. The hat was passed around after his demonstration Saturday and a few dollars were collected. As one last try a show will be held at Centennial Pool on Tuesday, June 30, It is hoped the proceeds will send – Webb flying.

MP aims for NDP top

Oshawa-Whitby's member of parliament may be the next leader of the New Democratic Party.

Edward Broadbent announced his candidacy in an official statement released Sunday.

Here's the announcement, in full:

"In April 1971, the Honourable T. C. Douglas will step down as the federal leader of the New Democratic Party; he will do so after a decade of vigorous and dedicated work on behalf of our party and the people of Canada, leaving behind the record of our nation's most distinguished contemporary social reformer.

"After careful thought during the past two weeks, I have decided to become a candidate for the leadership of the New Democratic Party.

"I have sought and received the advice of people whom I respect in our party: farmers, trade unionists, M.P.'s and academics — people living from the east to the west coast who make up the New Democratic Party.

"During the past two years I have worked hard as a Member of Parliament and have had the opportunity to learn much about the possibilities and problems of Canada.

"As Chairman of the Party's Resolutions Committee at our recent convention, I became fully acquainted with the federal program of the new Democratic Party.

"In the months ahead members of our party will have an opportunity to assess the candidates and decide who is most able to show that only a New Democratic Party government represents a meaningful alternative to the Liberal Party in the 1970's.

"It will be a serious, exciting and democratic contest. I look forward to it."

Attached to his announcement as a candidate, the Oshawa-Whitby MP, released these background notes:

Parade looks good

Watch for next Wednesday's July 1 parade. It looks promising.

That's the word this week from the Oshawa Folk Arts Council, organizers of the July 1 festivities.

The parade kicks off at 10 a.m. from the Midtown Mall. The route follows John Street to Simcoe, then north to Alexandra Park for presentation of trophies.

Trophies may be competed for in the following categories: Bands, senior and junior; marching units; majorettes; clowns, antique cars; horse and rider; decorated bicycles (boys and girls); commercial; nonprofit organizations or

editorial

Come off it, John Dehart and Company !

To some extent our patience was tried when we sat in on the meeting of the Oshawa Civic Affairs Association Monday night. John Dehart, with his customary touch, clouded the whole issue with a vast array of insupportable innuendoes; you might call it a classic instance of the blind leading the blind. Anyone so dumb as to swallow that guff about the Federal Government showing a willingness to transfer the airport or even the restricted zone around the airport for residential development, for a pittance, must be naive indeed.

We would remind you, John, that no so very long ago, you showed commendable talent in helping pushing through the rezoning of a certain tract of land adjacent to the airport, so that a subdivision could be created. The Central Ontario Joint Planning Board bowed to your superior wisdom on that occasion, and our guess is by your own admission the other night, you are having a hard time flogging it. Tough, John. You've made your bed, now lie on it, and don't expect us long suffering tax payers to bale you out of your own mistakes.

Another thing John, when you and your cohorts start attributing happenings such as the construction of a $90,000 control tower, to political pressure, we strongly suggest that you go home and do your homework, because if you had done a little research, you would have learnt the control tower was put in, quite rightly by the Department of Transport, for reasons of safety, and this newspaper for one has absolutely no quarrel with this decision.

And as for that tired cliche about putting the airport in Rama or Mara Township, it's beginning to sound rather like a cracked gramophone record.

And finally, you good citizens of Oshawa who live around the airport, we sympathize with you, but don't be conned by the oratory of John. Think of your fellow citizens who are just as inconvenienced by the flight path of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the flight path of the Canadian National Railway, when trains wail in the wee hours of the morning passing Thornton Road and Park Road and Ritson Road and all the other places that railways hoot at. And consider for a moment those very long suffering citizens who are in the flight path of the 401 — there is no let up, it goes on and on 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

We are sure a good number of you go up to the Kawartha Lakes and the Muskoka Lakes to get away from the noise of our wretched airport, and no doubt you take a boat with you, or perhaps you are fortunate to have one moored up there throughout the season. Well, do you know something? We don't like the noise of power boats any more than we like the noise of airplanes disturbing our tranquil afternoons when we are at our lakeside cottage. So you see, this matter of noise is relative, so don't believe the first loud mouth that shouts in your ear.

Urban overcrowding and its consequences

The prospect of urban overcrowding and its consequences are examined in a feature published by the Financial Post recently.

Dealing with Southern Ontario, the article is entitled "More people equals more crush plus more blight?" It raises the possibility that timely government action may head off undesirable development through this section of North America.

According to the Post, the spectre of an international city sprawling unchecked from Montreal to Chicago (a Great Lakes Magalopolis in the planners' jargon) is a grim one. Is it real enough though for the Ontario government to cite as its reasons for ending an era of planning permissiveness?

The government's new concept of what urban and rural planning will be acceptable has been emerging from a series of position papers. While lamentably thin on detail, these do contain several important points that are being heeded by planners in Ontario and across Canada. Among them:

- Industrial and residential expansion will occur only where the Ontario government technocrats deem it complies with both economic and aesthetic criteria. Indications of potential criteria are appearing in the government's design for development papers covering the Toronto area and Southern Ontario.

- Worthwhile incentives will be offered to businessmen to locate plants in the development areas selected by the technocrats. The first chosen will be in a group of satellite cities ringing the Lake Erie shoreline.

- A new tier of regional government will be placed between the existing provincial and municipal levels, presumably leading to some downgrading of the latter if local government costs are, in any way, to be kept in check.

- Urban and rural areas will be closely linked under all plans so land holdings can benefit both city and farm dwellers.

- The development areas, selected by government rather than private sector planners will be linked by arteries carrying high speed transportation and utility facilities and bounded by fully planned recreational zones.

These, as Premier Robarts has readily admitted, are broad-brush strokes and to a certain extent still negotiable. But, significantly, the concept of an overall plan stressing strict environmental and ecological controls has been a firm policy by all departments of the provincial government. Cabinet support too, apparently is unanimous, even though Robarts has bluntly warned the policy means "a larger role being played by government in the lives of each and everyone of us."

To the surprise of many, only minimal objection has been raised in either political or industrial circles against Robarts' view that "only through government action can we deal with many of the extremely large problems which face people today." Canadians, of course, don't have far to look to see some of these problems. Examples of environmental exploitation and urban decay abound south of the border.

Concern that the blight might be spreading into Ontario began to appear in government circles when several unrelated but far reaching development plans were announced.

It is wise of the provincial government to become deeply involved in planning also for the commercial growth that will take place in the near future in those regions of the province subject to an "industrial revolution."

It is hoped the province will continue its mutual approach of local resident combined with government-appointed planner. In this way the myriad problems that the big change will contain, will be kept to a minimum.

Thanks for waking me

Sir:

This is in connection with your editorial "Christmas Day on December 27."

Please do not stop bringing out the dirty wash. Your editorial should have woken a few of us up to the fact that it is up to us in Oshawa to clean up our own dirty wash.

What the General Motors people have taken on is just too much for me to stand for. How in any way can they decide that to please them July 1 shall not be our National Day. No company and/or unin is that big that all Canada must kneel to them. I for one am a Canadian who believes July 1 is our National Day and not any other day.

I wish I was a letter writer. This has been my first letter to any editor. I have also written to Ed Broadbent, MP.

Thank you for waking me up.

So Ed Broadbent, MP Oshawa-Whitby, has thrown his hat in the ring for the New Democratic Party Leadership. "It's going to be a serious, exciting anddemocratic contest," he announced this week. At this point in the MP's career, I wonder what will happen to his motorcycle. Broadbent is one of very few politicians to indulge in the rite of riding a motorcycle. The bike is in Oshawa most of the time, buried under a canvass in the yard of the Broadbent home on Central Park Blvd. But perhaps this is the time to move it to the capital, along with a "mark of excellence" sticker on the rear fender? "Cheap publicity," you say. You may be wrong. The two-wheeler might just do what the rose and the kisses and the hairdo did for the once popular prime minister.

And how was your Father's Day, dad? I shared mine with number one daughter and number two son whose birthday fell on the same day this year. And all that, after recovering from a family experiment that I wouldn't particularly suggest for a try to anyone else with a large family.

Since all birthdays fall in the summer time at our house, we decided that instead of six children's birthday parties — and over the years it has seemed as if there was one every week or so — we'd have one party on June 20, to which each of the kids would invite four friends.

So the backyard looked like a school playground here Saturday and if you think that frying about 40 hamburgers and 30 odd hotdogs on the barbecue is for you, try it. But make sure you warm up a number of buns that equals the number of dogs and patties on the fire, and also, make sure you have a can opener for pop cans, so you don't have to use a screwdriver when 30 kids are standing in line, waiting very impatiently for their pop, because it goes with the hamburger, and their hamburger is getting cold, while the pop's getting warm, while in the meantime the other buns you put in the top drawer of the barbecue for the next batch of hotdogs are beginning to show signs of blackness around the edges . . .

Anyway, all you hamburger and hot dog stand entrepreneurs, if you're ever in a tight spot, give me a call. I believe I have the formula worked out now. At next summer's birthday party I will be demonstrating the fine art of synchronization in the preparation of hamburgers, buns, relish, mustard, wieners and ketchup.

Tempest in a B-Cup?

The number one newspaper story last week has to be Earl McRae's report in Saturday's Toronto Star about the rise and fall of the brassiere.

McRae showed some top drawer journalistic digging when he managed to uncover the best-kept secret of our time that "nine out of 10 women you don't think are wearing bras are wearing them."

The Star writer's story shows some fine undercover work. He managed to dig up a quote from a 22-year old stripper, who ended by being "glad the truth is out on this thing," and one from a 21-year flower girl.

Peter Ray, known in the trade as Mister Wonder Bra was interviewed by the Star man in his office. Smiling up at a huge poster on his office wall of a girl in a scanty brassiere, he told MacRae: "There it is. The whole idea. The challenge was there and we met it."

The challenge, according to Ray, had come in the form of a small number of girls with little or no busts in Canada and the U.S. who threatened to start a North American fad by throwing away their bras.

The bra makers, catching a whiff of oblivion, sent their market analysts out to see what was going on — or off.

They came back to report that an insignificant number of women were actually discarding their bras and that a significant number would like to if they had the right size and the right nerve.

"There were some anxious moments in the boardrooms of the bra-makers," admitted Ray. "We had to come up with something to give the women a new freedom, a new softness, a new comfort."

The answer?

"The new revolutionary, lightweight, silky, soft-cup, see-through bra," Ray calls it. The name? "The Unbra and Like Nothing On."

The word from the shops, according to the Star reporter, is that the new soft-cup no-bra brassieres are outselling production. Women of all ages are buying them, according to one shopkeeper who added it's "mainly a little bust phenomenon."

"We call it a tempest in a B-Cup," said Sybil Young (38-C) the publicity director of the Foundation Garment Institute of Canada, which represents most of the major bra makers.

"Our studies show that 60 per cent of Canadian women still need some form of padding or support. Kitchener girls should never wear them. Our studies show they have the largest breasts in Canada. It's to do with their German stock, their eating habits."

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics says total bra shipments forthe first quarter of '70 are down 95,504 over the '69 first quarter.

"The no-bra fad is in there too," said G. A. Graham, DBS information officer in Toronto. 'But it's mainly the uncertain economy. People are doing without the non-essentials."

The Star reporter reveals "there's revolution everywhere in the underwear business.

Comfort Products Ltd. is about to market a "new and fantastic" falsie whichpins to the dress." It is more natural than the no-bra bra," said manager John Ellig.

"We hear the bra makers are quite worried."

If they aren't, the garter belt makers are.

"Forget the bra story," shouted Fred Woolf when contacted by reporter McRae in Hamilton where he manages the very tiny bra-and-garter belt company called Stella Lucas and Co.

"The story is the decline of the garter belt and what it is doing to me. The mini skirt started it and then came the pantyhose and now nobody wears garter belts anymore. I'm being killed I'm starving. You should see how skinny I am."

Star writer McRae deserves a medal for having put his finger on it, in this revealing story. Perhaps even better, the brassiere manufacturers might consider erecting a special bust of McRae in some suitable place, so all men may pay homage to him for having revealed the big secret of our time. Mr. McRae, you have brought honor to your profession.

July 1, no matter what

Sir:

I am writing to blow off steam regarding July 1, being observed on July 3. I think it ridiculous that a great country such as Canada can't celebrate its birthday on July 1, no matter what day it falls on.

Our good neighbors to the south wouldn't think of holding their July 4 on July 3 — it's very inconvenient for them this year because it's on Saturday.

Most U.S. labor is not working on July 3, but the big day is still Saturday, July 4.

It also seems strange to me that we have fireworks on Victoria Day, May (May 21 this year) when fireworks, parades, etc. would be more suitable for July 1.

Canada will be 103 years old this year. My opinion is that Canadians from coast to coast must act now to preserve what we have. If we were to take notice of Canada as nature has made it we would notice that there is no-place on earth quite like Canada.

It has bothered me for some time to see our American friends invest in Canada. They buy vacation land in the north, build factories, etc.

In my opinion they are more interested in Canada than Canadians.

You stated in June 17 issue of THIS WEEK, what happened to Bill C-104. I think that the readers of THIS WEEK get behind M.P. Ed Broadbent and make July 1 a day of the people.

This would be a start in the right direction, I like to think of Canada for Canadians, and Canadians for Canada.

have to get our shop open. So-o-o
August the first is our goal. We have a sneaking suspicion that all our rooms, such as our exciting "Picadilly Circus" won't be ready but that will just leave us a juicy little morcel to yet, such as walk-ways, lamp posts, and yes, maybe even a kiosk to add a little exotic touch to our

He's got "the best drop-in centre" in the city

By Francine Fortier

A student summer training program that's dramatic, imaginative and exciting . . .

Young people who are enthusiastic, eager and happy . . .

These are the adjectives Commanding Officer, Lieutenant-Colonel N. M. Hall of the Ontarios is using to describe the regiment's training program in the Oshawa-Whitby area this summer.

As its allotment of the federal government's $28 million employment program for students, a total of $7.9 million in supplementary estimates is being given to the Defense Department. The Ontario Regiment has enlisted over 100 male students in the seven week course which begins on July 6.

"Looking at the young fellows we've signed up" says Hall, "I'm delighted with the standard of candidate we are receiving. These are obviously serious young men who are interested in joining and I hope some will be staying on after the course is over."

It's the interested, eager fellows the Regiment is interested in. They aren't concerned with dragging just anyone in off the streets — "people of good character" only are accepted. The Regiment is not permitted to enroll people who have criminal records or problems of this nature.

All students enlisting are screened inside-out through checked interviews, application forms, medical checkups and the RCMP. If a person is accepted he signs a contract to serve for a specific period of time and swears allegiance to the Queen.

SCREENING

After all this "screening" the applicants get a little "nervous". "I think they get frightened" says Hall, "as they see the enormousness and importance of it all and say, 'What am I getting into.' Some have disappeared into the night — the army isn't for everybody, it isn't that simple."

However, Hall says it's the Regiment's job to keep the soldiers happy. "We got to keep them eager" says Hall. "Once their enthusiasm starts to wane their performance is cut down and they don't work as well. It's our primary job not only to offer good training but also to offer a dramatic, imaginative program of training."

Part of this "exciting" program is field training. The soldiers are rarely kept indoors as most of the important training must be carried out in a suitable environment. The suitable environment includes sunshine and plenty of fresh air.

FIELD

The first four weeks of the course involves basic training — how to wear uniforms, march, salute and use weapons, etc. The last three weeks involves advanced training — operating a radio set, handling a machine gun, driving wheel and tracked vehicles, and living in the field and conducting military operations.

A full week of field training will be carried on at Camp Petawawa.

The soldiers are primarily trained to back up the regular army. But equally as important is that their training's usefulness isn't limited solely to the military field. They will be able to apply a good share of the practical experiences to civilian life. They learn how to handle weapons safely; how to live under adverse conditions in the woods or the desert; how to drive a variety of vehicles; read a map; apply first aid and more.

NOT FRUSTRATED

"We think the soldiers are very happy" says Hall. "They don't get frustrated — we keep them too busy to be frustrated. We have too many exciting things going on to leave them this way."

Hall insists that this picture of enjoyment is a realistic one. Gone are the days he says, of barking sergeants and squirming soldiers. "There is a certain amount of barking" says Hall, "although there isn't as much as people think there is. It isn't necessary — you don't need to shout at people to get results."

After using weapons and learning how to shoot at moving targets, does the whole frightening aspect of war leave these young soldiers despondant?

"Soldiers don't get depressed" says Hall. "They are trained in such a way, mentally and physically, not to become depressed. They think that the 'shooting' part of their training is a necessary evil of anybody that's in the army. They learn to shoot for peace.

BULLWARKY!

"All these tin-horn journalists out in Vietnam blow things out of perspective. They think they know all of the feelings of depression out there. They don't know — it's all bullwarky — this isn't the case at all.

"Our seven week training program is so condensed and so carefully programmed there won't be any time to be depressed, and there won't be any frame of mind susceptible to depression."

Once a soldier at the Regiment learns how to safely use a weapon, says Hall, he is exhilerated when he can go out to the field and actually use it and point it at a target.

"We don't teach them to 'harden' their minds," says Hall. "I think battle does this. We teach them to stand up for peace and to go to battle for it, if they have to. But I hope they never will."

When the student first comes to the Regiment he is eager and interested. If he's made a mistake, he's weeded out right at the beginning.

THANK YOU

"Out of the 1,500 that have come through here in this course" says Hall, "only three or four people have ever been dismissed.

"The others — some have come up to us and said 'Thank you, we appreciate your help! Parents phone me up and write to me, saying 'I don't know what you've done to our boy but he's a different kid now!' We get many calls from grateful parents.

"At the end of the summer these men stand a lot straighter, and they are a great deal more resourceful, respectful and sure of themselves, than before they came in.

"Personally, I feel good about this program. I think it's a great program and a good idea as well as a contribution to the country's security. When I see a fellow, after being trained, swinging his arms, holding himself erect, and breathing deeply — that's enough for me.

"I think we should have a thousand young people here. They talk about drop in centers and things like that in Oshawa — I think I've got the best drop-in center in Oshawa."

PAY

All soldiers participating in this program in Oshawa will be paid a Private Soldier's rate of pay which is $9 a day. Lunch, uniforms and equipment will be provided free of charge.

The Ontario Regiment was the first in Canada to pioneer the student militia summer training program in 1955. At this time all the reserve regiments were filled up with veterans from the war. So headquarters said "let's put new age limits into effect that cater towards younger men." Previously the age bracket had been in the 18—50 bracket, now the 18—26 bracket was stressed.

The role of the reserves was changing and younger men were needed to emphasize this. The first course was directed towards high school undergraduates with an enrolment of 50. Since this time, 1,500 students have taken the annual summer course.

Some have stayed on in the Regiment and have become officers and non-commissioned officers and others have gone on to full time careers in other fields.

Then, two weeks ago, the federal government came along with the summer employment program for students and opened up spaces in the Ontario Regiment for almost 100 more soldiers than usually trained.

Mayor discussed planning for future of the region

ning for the future of the area, Oshawa's mayor called it "a fight against the dark shadow of urban over-crowding as it spreads across Southern Ontario."

Mackey is calling on all residents of the Oshawa region to "work together against sprawling, congested urbanization to protect our natural environment for ourselves and our children."

The mayor told the meeting of the Kiwanis Club of Ajax there has been a growth in the responsibilities of local governments which has not been matched by corresponding increases in their financial powers. "I know that both the Town of Ajax and the City of Oshawa have, as other municipalities, been caught in a "squeeze" with revenues still largely derived from the regressive real property tax lagging behind expenditure requirements. Our accounts have been balanced in recent years by larger grants from senior governments and an increased absolute volume of borrowing and over the longer run by some shifts of functions to the Province such as Administration of Justice and Assessment, but there is considerable evidence to suggest that the terms on which the accounting balance has been attained particularly in respect of the quality of urban services is less than satisfactory.

"Since it is highly doubtful that the municipal revenue base even with improvement would be sufficient to support the growing needs of many of our residents, it is not a question of whether further assistance is required from senior governments but rather what forms should such assistance take.

"This problem of municipal finance in recent years has been much discussed and the general consensus appears to be a merging in a regional government structure based on the broad principle, difficult though its application may be in practice that "services whose benefits accrue to areas wider than the individual municipality should in part be the responsibility of a wider government jurisdiction.

"In an economy where people are increasingly mobile, this principle can be translated into a case for the broader jurisdiction, particularly jurisdictions with access to the more dynamic tax sources supporting a substantial part of services to people while allocating local expenditures more to services to property and for this reason I look forward to the deliberations of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study to indicate to us the financial capability of the proposed region and its effect on the local taxpayer who pays the shot."

The Provincial Government is now looking to the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study

Given the right spirit of partnership and co-operation, the mayor said he is convinced that the fruits of this intensive study and dialogue will prove to be a new step forward in planning for growth.

Major William Clarke who's had 15 years experience conducting these courses, will conduct this particular course. He will be assisted by Captain Patrick Dooley, Captain Robert Anderson and Lieutenant Richard Nicholson.

No females are included in the summer course, although there are at present, 10 women belonging to the Canadian Women's Army Corp working with the Regiment. They perform administrative duties as well as field work. ("Women make very good soldiers" says Hall. "Some of them can shoot a gun better than male soldiers.")

If you happen to be passing the Armouries bright and early 8 o'clock one morning, you might see the student militia program in action. Look for the fellows in their black berets, light colored open necked shirts, cotton drill trousers, broad black belts, army boots and neat, clean haircuts.

Hello! Here I am in New York City attending the New York Couture 55th National Press Week. Fashion editors from all over the U.S. and some from Canada are gathered at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Every day from 8.30 to 5.30 p.m. we are confronted with an almost constant parade of fashions for fall. The music goes on and on and the commentators all tell the same tale about covering up our knees. More about that later.

This is the biggest and most frustrating hotel I have every stayed in. (look at that preposition — I must be tired) The Waldorf Astoria covers a complete city block. There are more than 1700 rooms between the 5th and 27th floors. The 28th to 42nd. floors are private apartments.

On my first night here, I lost my way and couldn't find my room. Cold sober and in my right mind, I padded along endless corridors, all looking the same and turned corners until I felt trapped. Green carpet, white walls, numbered doors and not a sight or sound of a living soul.

The illuminated sign ELEVATOR brought me out of a moment of panic. I made for it and started a fresh safari in the opposite direction.

Next day I discovered that because I had used the west-end elevator and my room was in the east end, I had literally walked from Park Lane to Lexington several times over in a Greek key pattern.

We had all been to a dinner in the Persian room of the Park Plaza where Doc Severinsen, trumpeter in Johnny Carson's band was the star entertainer. He was assisted by The New Generation Band and the Brothers and Sisters singing, rock group. All very brassy, but the shrimp cocktails and roast beef were succulent.

Earlier we had been guests of Robert Taplinger, a commercial tycoon, at his town house on 49th Street, a steep, narrow house filled with rare antiques. In the walled and paved Italian garden at the back we were served Pimm's cup and turkey sandwiches.

On Tuesday night we were invited to a Diamond Dinner at the Chateau Madrid. Real diamonds worth hundreds of thousands of dollars from Cartier, Tiffany, Van Cleef and Arpels were worn by models wearing clothes designed by Rodrigues. I didn't see the clothes for the diamonds. I suppose every other male guest was a detective. Couldn't find out.

The entertainment by Los Chavales de Espana "The Kinds from Spain", was a delight. The group of eight young men, so handsome, were talented violinists and equally expert trumpeters and sax players. They gave us tangos and waltzes. A pair of dancers performed flamenco dances to a classic guitar, clicking heels and castagnets. Sipping our sangria, we all felt very Spanish.

The next night, three of us went to see Katherine Hepburn in "Coco", the story of the French designer, Chanel. The costuming by Cecil Beaton was gorgeous and Hepburn was given a standing ovation, though I still prefer her in the movies.

Her voice which I like on the sound track, was grating in the theatre. She forced it so much that my throat ached and she can't sing.

The Mark Hellinger theatre is about the size of the Royal Alex and opulent with corinthian columns and ornate roccoco plasterwork, all very dirty.

We walked back to the Waldorf from Broadway and 51st. It was very hot and humid. The streets were crowded. Art shops and book shops were still open for midnight browsers.

On we went past the Taft Hotel, Radio City Music Hall and Rockefeller Centre where the orchestra was still playing, to Park Avenue where the flower beds dividing the traffic were massed with yellow and white chrysanthemums.

The tops of the skyscrapers were veiled in fog colored pink and green by the neon lights, and so thick you could smell it.

There's more to tell but it has been a long day so for now, good-night with love from New York.

Summer art classes for 100 children planned

This summer, drawing and painting classes are being provided for children interested in art, by the Robert McLaughlin Gallery.

There are going to be two sessions, the first July 13 to 31 and the second session, August 10 to the 28. The classes will be given on weekday mornings, Monday to Friday, from 10 a.m. to 12 noon.

Paul Sloggett is to be the supervisor for this program. He is a second year student at the Ontario College of Art, in Toronto, and he is well experienced in handling children, having been a playground supervisor for the Oshawa Recreation Department for a number of years.

Assisting Paul will be three other boys, Andy Bartkiw, Andy is an artist in his own right and next year will be attending the Sheridan College of Design, in Toronto, Quido Harjv and Howard Stacey, both High School students. Assisting the four boys at all times will be two ladies from the Oshawa and District Art Association.

Sloggett has arranged the program so that the 100 children will be broken into four groups of 25, each with its own leader. The ladies will be assisting the boys with the two groups of youngest children. There will be four projects each week, and Friday will be used to finish up any project that wasn't completed in the four other days.

The children will be given drawing boards and all sessions will be outside around the Gallery and the Civic Centre area. The Gallery will have a film program ready at all times in the Main Gallery, in case of a rainy day.

The three week course will cost $10 for each child. If there is more than one child from a family the cost will be $8.00 per child.

McLaughlin scholarship for journalism student

An 18-year-old Indian girl from Dryden whose parents are both dead has been awarded a $500 scholarship to enter the School of Journalism at Carleton University next fall.

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation announced that Valerie Williams, a Grade 12 student at Dryden High School, will receive the scholarship named in honor of Col. R. S. McLaughlin.

When the Federation named its 1970 Lamp of Learning recipient in early May, it also announced a special Citation in honor of Col. McLaughlin for his gift of a planetarium to the students and citizens of the province.

OSSTF President Ward McAdam said then that a simple citation or scroll would be inadequate thanks from the teaching profession to the Oshawa industrialist-philantrhopist. Therefore, he said, the Federation planned to present a scholarship on a once-only basis in Col. McLaughlin's name.

To Lorna and Hazel work is "like entertaining guests at home"

What's it like for a wife who works outside of the home? Is her home life neglected? Do the husband and children mind? Does it make her more or less of a woman? This is the third in a series of stories about Oshawa's working wives and mothers.

By Francine Fortier

Meet two women who enjoy their work every bit as much as the people they serve enjoy them.

Lorna Turner and Hazel Lamb are two "rib ticklers" who work as waitresses at the Genosha Hotel's Rib Room.

Individually, they work for different reasons. Together they feel the same way about their work.

Lorna and her husband Garfield have been married 25 years and have two children — Tyrone, 24 and Charyl, 23.

Lorna has been working with the Genosha for 14 years and has been at the Rib Room since it opened five years ago.

Originally, she was a school teacher in Italy. It was there she met her husband and they both moved to England where they lived for nine years.

When she came to Canada her teaching qualifications were not recognized. "I went to the Parliament Buildings" she recalls, "wrote an exam, had an interview, and was told that I would have to go to teacher's college. I couldn't drive and I didn't want to leave my children alone for a whole day so I didn't go to the college. English was my worst subject, so I applied for a job with Harry Feiner, owner of the Genosha, to improve my English.

"I've been here ever since and I really like it. I've taught private lessons from time to time but I always like this job best. I love the personal contact I have with the people and working in a place like the Rib Room is like entertaining in your own living room."

TRIPS

Lorna says her husband has no objections at all to her working. She says the money helps to be able to afford numerous extras such as their trips abroad. In the last eight years Lorna and Garfield have managed to take several trips to Europe — Italy, France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Spain, Portugal, Yugoslavia, and this year they're travelling to Russia.

"The extra money" says Lorna, "has also helped to put my son through university — he's graduating as a doctor next year, and it has helped put my duaghter through college.

"The children don't mind me working. They go along with it. In fact, we gave each of them a trip to Europe for their 21st birthday gifts."

Lorna normally works a 20 hour week so she has enough spare time to visit her friends and sit out in her garden and read. As far as meals go, she says, "When my children were home before they got married, I was always home in the afternoon to prepare meals — breakfast, lunch and dinner."

Housework she does herself.

HAZEL

Hazel and her husband Douglas have been married for 24 years, and have two children — Bonnie, 22 and Randy, 17.

She has been working at the Rib Room for five years.

"Before I worked with the Genosha" says Hazel, "I worked at the Toronto airport as a waitress for nine years."

Hazel is from Janetville, Ontario. Here, she went to elementary school but couldn't afford to go to high school. "I lived in the country" says Hazel, "and the school was in town and I couldn't afford to pay board in town and go to school. Beside I came from a large family.

"This is why I had to get a job. My first job was in the diet kitchen in the Lindsay hospital for $12 a month."

Hazel met her husband in Lindsay and moved from Calgary to Campbellville, to Toronto and finally to Whitby.

Why is she working?

MONEY

"Because I need the money" says Hazel. "I need it for my daughter's education, for my son to go to university, for basic living essentials — extra money just to help my husband."

Does Hazel's husband mind her working?

"He's all for it" says Hazel. "He thinks it's a wonderful thing — the extra money certainly comes in handy."

The children don't mind either, says Hazel. When the children were young, Hazel and Doug worked on alternate shifts so they wouldn't be alone. And now that they're older they've become accustomed to having a "working mother."

Hazel, herself has become accustomed to her job and the thought of leaving it doesn't appeal to her. "I've become so used to it" says Hazel, "that I find after a few days at home I have nothing to do. I'm anxious to get in to work to visit the other waitresses, Lorna and Della, and find out what's new."

Hazel works a 30 hour week, does all her own housework, and cooks the meals when she's able to. "Whe I'm at work" says Hazel, "my family looks after their own meals. My son can make pancakes and take care of himself, that's something he's had to do."

Spare time? "I don't have any, really" says Hazel. "I don't belong to find out what's going on, the Chief explains, you just get an answering service. If you do manage to catch up with them, they simply come and do your driveway. Most people, though, never see them again.

"If a person is in business and is a reputable business, he doesn't mind putting his name in the phone book or advertising in the newspapers, suggests Chief Jenkins. He suggests that people who are approached by some fly-by-night operation check at the police station or the chamber of commerce to see if they are legitimate businesses.

Compared to other cities, Oshawa is in a pretty good position regarding major crime, says Chief Jenkins. Crime nationally increased 14 percent last year, he says, and provincially the increase was 12 percent. Oshawa has an increase of only three percent.

Jenkins attributes this to "good police, a good city, and good luck."

CITIZENS ASSIST

"We find that the citizens are ready and willing to assist and some even phone to tell about some crime that is taking place," the chief reports. "This not only makes us a better police department, it also makes the community a better place to live because the people are ready and willing to help out."

Public relations is becoming an increasingly important aspect of police work, says Chif Jenkins. Although the police force works for the good of the community, it sometimes has to hurt individuals.

"Nothing can break down good relations as much as when an officer comes into contact with people in a disagreeable situation," he says. Probably the most frequent disagreeable situation is the issuing of tickets for parking and traffic violations.

"People aren't happy to receive tickets, they don't greet the officer with smiles and arms out. There's animosity towards us," he says. "But the public is pretty good as long as we constantly strive to show people that we're trying to be fair.

NOT PERSECUTION

"When we charge a person, we're only prosecuting him," says the chief, "we're not out to persecute him."

Jenkins says that being chief can be pretty lonely at times and this is a particularly difficult year with so many contracts up for negotiation in the city.

I have to send our men out to patrol strikes and factories to make sure these workers don't get out of line, he explains, and the policemen have their own contract negotiations also.

"The law requires them to do certain things and they can't strike to get better contracts the way other workers can. "It is very fortunate I'm surrounded by very good officers and personnel," says Chief Jenkins.

"The police department is like a big wheel, every one is a spoke and we all do our share to keep the wheel moving."

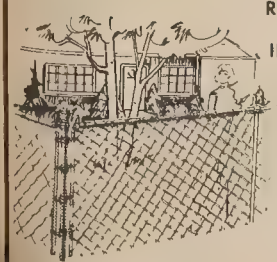
BOTH.

When they're together at work brunette Lorna and blonde Hazel have a great time.

In between giggles and laughs they admitted, "We have some nerve racking times when we are so busy that we have no time to talk to each other. But at the end of an evening we have time to remenisce the day.

"And we've never had an argument yet.

"Working here is very very pleasant and many nights after we finish work we say, 'Today was a nice day. We really enjoyed working.'



"We are left by ourselves here, and nobody is breathing down our necks.

"A few times people have walked out without paying, and we are responsible for it, but this doesn't happen too often.

"Most often, the customers are very pleasant. We have the best of guests. They are so friendly and treat us as though we were friends. Many times we have been bugged and kissed by our guests.

"We will tell jokes and anecdotes and our guests from the United States take photographs of us, write to us, send photographs of themselves, send postcards and send their friends if they can't come back themselves. They even send us Christmas cards and gifts — lots of chocolates.

"We love working at the Rib Room. It's such a friendly atmosphere. And when we're too old to work we plan to work for a few years more."

After arenas and pools, creek valley is next

The municipal government is becoming increasingly aware of the need to provide recreational facilities for its citizens.

Patrick Kennedy, Oshawa's parks, property commissioner, feels that this is a vital service the city must provide as more people retire earlier and people in general have more leisure time.

To date city council has concentrated its efforts on providing arenas and swimming facilities. A new twin-pad arena which can be used all year round is under construction at the south end of the city. There is an arena in the centre of town, another in the north end.

The Civic Auditorium complex contains an excellent skating surface in the winter and converts to lacrosse in the summer. It is also perfect for use as a large auditorium. The same building on Thornton's Rd. S. houses the Centennial pool and the recreation department with all its special programs and facilities.

But there is still much to do.

VALLEY IS NEXT

Kennedy's top priority project over the next 20 years is to see the Oshawa Creek valley developed as the prime recreation and park facility in the city.

The Project Planners report outlining the scheme to preserve the creek valley for use as a recreational and park area was presented to council in 1966.

To date, however, council has been unable to find funds to finance even the first stage — the development of the block between John and Gibb Streets. Money was set aside for this purpose in 1968, but the quota lapsed.

The parks, property committee, however, hopes that a start may be made this year in cooperation with the Ontario County Board of education, which will use the park in conjunction with the two near-by high-schools, Central Collegiate and the Vanier Technical Collegiate.

The land has even been purchased and detailed design work completed.

The creek valley project stretches the length of the Oshawa Creek from Lake Ontario to the city limits north. It would be a centre for recreational facilities, walks, sedentary spots, playgrounds, picnic areas, and at the northern limits it would join in with the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority plans to dam up the creek and create an artificial lake for all kinds of water sports.

"The Oshawa Creek Valley is something the city has that many municipalities would give their right arm for," Commissioner Kennedy says. "It can end up as a really beautiful strip of parkland in the middle of a large metropolitan area in 20 years' time.

"I'm not saying we should do it all quickly — just get it started and work it into a regular program to aim for completion 20 years."

URGES START

The parks boss urges an early start on the creek valley project since land costs could well boost the total expenditure on the development considerably if delayed for a long time.

Much of the expsnse will not have to be borne by Oshawa taxpayers, fortunately. Since Oshawa is a member of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority, half of the cost will be paid by the provincial government and a tiny share will be contributed by the other members.

"Leadership to provide recreational outlets for the people has to come from the municipality," he says. "Let's face facts — if the municipality doesn't pick up the tab, who will?"

Although Kennedy says Oshawa has a respectably high degree of recreational and sports facilities, there is much more the city could do. Extra grants from higher levels of government towards recreational facilities and programs, he says, would speed up the program and take a certain amount of the burden off the local taxpayer.

"I think it is enough to expect people to spend their time coaching and managing different sports organizations in the city. The municipality should supply the leadership in giving the citizens of Oshawa good facilities."

The city has 51 parks, including major parks such as Alexandra Park and Lakeview Park, and neighbourhood ones scattered throughout the city.

ADD TO PARKS

This year, Kennedy hopes to undertake the revamping of several of the neighbourhood parks to better fulfill the demands of all age groups in a neighbourhood.

Wading pools, tennis courts and shuffle boards will be added. In some of the smaller parks the baseball diamonds might be limited, while they will be more closely grouped in the larger parks. New and more interesting play ground equipment will be installed. And Kennedy intends to brighten up the parks — cropped fields — with trees and perhaps some flowers.

"We hope the parks that are redeveloped will have something for all age groups," says the parks, property commissioner. Larger parks will feature special recreational opportunities. Kennedy says this will be a continuing program with two or three parks being redeveloped each year.

Three of the city's ball diamonds are floodlit and in continuous use from May until September. City parks also offer tennis courts, a couple of lacrosse bowls and five soccer fields. The three outdoor swimming pools are in operation from mid June until early September.

AIRPORT

The Oshawa Airport, which comes under the auspices of this department notes that a total of almost 5,000 commercial flights originated in or landed at the airport in 1969. The newly opened Department of Transport control tower operates from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily. The parks, property committee, is working on a request to the federal transport department for assistance in expanding the facilities and operations at the airport.

EXHIBITION?

This committee is also investigating possible locations for large exhibition grounds for the city, probably close to the airport. This exhibition site would offer parimutuel betting horse racing, and a full-sized stadium. It could also become the home of the Oshawa Fair Board's annual fair, as well as industrial and commercial shows and any other type of fair or exhibition which develops.

Kennedy is responsible for keeping the city neat, tidy and attractive. His three expert gardeners and their summertime help maintain a greenhouse with over 100,000 plants and do the landscaping at the civic complex, Hills and Dales and

Liberace - Mr. Showmanship

Yet another big name in show biz joins the ranks of performers at the Oshawa Civic Auditorium next week.

Tuesday is Liberace Day at the Civic, and the fun starts at 8 p.m.

Who is Liberace anyway?

Bill Kurelo, manager of the Civic Auditorium, provides this background material on "Mr. Showmanship":

look at history, opening August 18.

Rehearsals will begin June 24, on the new thrust stage being built by members of the company.

It was announced that telephone orders for tickets at $2.50 individual tickets or $6.00 for all three productions would be accepted from July 10 by calling 983-5617. The box office will be open July 25 daily except Fridays.

Curtain time, 8.15 p.m. in repertory on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Oshawa students who are members of the Orono Youth Theatre include Philip Akin, Monica Connolly, Jane Grose, Rossie Grose, Peter Lloyd, Elaine McQuarrie, Robert Paynter, Herschel Rosen, Bryan Smith and Marilyn Burnett.

The Liberace legend started in West Allis, Wisconsin — on the outskirts of Milwaukee.

The boy born May 16, 1919, to an Italian father and Polish mother was affectionately and imaginatively christened Wladziu (Walter) Valentino Liberace. It was a musical family. Father Salvatore played the french horn; sister Angelina was to take piano lessons, along with big brother, George (though he later switched to the violin). The real debut for Liberace took place during a family musicale. Having learned to pick out the notes, four year old Wladziu waited till the others had finished and then gave his own rendition of a song on the piano. (George always claimed the song was "O'Katherina" — but Liberace has smilingly insisted it was Listz's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody.")

Though he was already a true headliner, including a performance before a capacity crowd at Carnegie Hall in 1953, it was the following year that saw Liberace really take the country by storm.

Starting with a television show on an independent Los Angeles station, his program quickly became syndicated in over 190 cities from coast to coast. His first sponsor was a local bank. They offered a Liberace recording to anyone opening a new account — and were swamped with new business. The face, prematurely greying hair, voice, and delightful artistry of Liberace made his show one of the most popular in television history. And one, whose creative touches were rewarded with two Emmy Awards.

He played for Presidents, two command performances for Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mother Elizabeth during two of his triumphal appearances in England; guested on television programs; had roles in a number of motion pictures; and recorded hit album after album — six of them gold million sellers. One performance, in Madison Square Garden even topped the box office record established by his idol, Paderewski — a record that had stood for two decades.

Symphony goes to "reserved seats" policy

For its new concert series, Oshawa Symphony Orchestra is following the lead of other successful Canadian orchestras, in offering all seats on a reserved basis.

Subscription tickets went on sale for the first time Saturday.

Chairman Roy Barrand of the subscription committee says the response to the announcement of the reserved seats plan has been "most gratifying." Already 400 of the 750 seats available at Eastdale Auditorium have been sold. "We expect full reservation in a week or so," Barrand told This Week.

Subscription tickets entitle the holder to reserved seats for four concerts, and Barrand urges readers to fill in the coupon in the Symphony Orchestra advertisement on the after hours pages.

An all-Beethoven concert is planned for October 25, and Handel's Messiah is slated for a performance by the Oshawa Symphony Chorus and orchestra on December 13.

The St. Augustine Boys Choir will be here February 21

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

Poor old Stirling Moss got scrubbed. Not that he was dirty or we were mad at him but rather the tape we made with him just before the first Can-Am race somehow got erased. It's a pity because it was a humdinger of a talk. So to fill in the regular scheduled chit chat — as good fortune would have it — the local militia approached us with a scheme that suddenly hit the spot. At the armouries this week a recruiting drive is going on for a summer training course that not only will clothe and feed the young man but pay him as well, and since so many students are out of work this summer it's a golden opportunity to get some loot. The show is called simply "Recruit" to be shown tonight at 6:15.

During the same evening's broadcast at 8:30 its "Teen Talk" with an articulate six pack of teens discussing respect to elders and digressing a bit but very enjoyable and perhaps slightly traumatic for the parents.

Thursday the Queen's Plate is being run, but not this year's. It's the 1965 race when the Queen mother came down but as far as I can make out if you've seen one horse race you've seen them all.

But the 'piece de resistance' is some location shooting that Cablecast 8 will be doing over the next seven day period. First off, the editor of "This Week" and the program director of Cablecast 8 are off to Pettawawa to watch and report on our boys in action — The Ontario Regiment —. Operation Steel Ring is the name of the tactical excersise with tanks and guns. A half hour show will be the result of this adventure.

Then, since many must work on July the first and will miss the Dominion Day parade they will get an opportunity to see the parade after work on July the first.

With the usual gaggle of National Film Board films it should be an interesting week along with our regulars Madge Crichton, Hans Haagmans, and the Manpower crew. But with my luck something big will come along and whammo, the schedule will get readjusted. But that doesn't happen too often and when it does occur I reach for the large jar of tums for my tummy.

Oshawa would never become a freight carrying airport. To spend money on it at this stage would be wrong, especially since Oshawa was within easy driving distance of Toronto International Airport.

Griffith also said the public has no idea what is planned. He talked of a 45% extension of the runway to the east and a 15% extension to the west, and said noise problems would be felt as far away as Mary Street & Massey Streets.

"People just don't know what is going on — they have no idea what is being programmed by the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board."

Another home owner told the meeting Mr. Stoner had told him airport expansion was "often a matter of strictly political pressure" and things being done unnecessarily. He also referred to the study done by Queens University Professor J. Crawley, in connection with the feasibility of an enlarged airport at Oshawa. He said "according to CFRB the jumbo airport will be located between Cobourg and Port Hope".

One resident asked how much revenue the City derives from the airport as it is at present.

Griffith replied "I gather they are not getting a penny," and whatever little bit of revenue the city does get is offset four or five times by costs such as upkeep of the airport and snow-ploughing.

DeHart said, "we don't feel an expanded airport would produce additional revenue for the city." On the other hand, he added, the taxes that would be forthcoming from the land now occupied by the airport if zoned residential, would represent a large amount.

Chronicles of Osh

1. And in the sixth month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy it became clear, moreover abundantly, that the tribes of Osh, yea the tribes who labored throughout the lands of Can, were exceedingly filled with wrath at some of the decrees made from his throne on high by Big Chief Waterhole, ruler of all the nations in the land of Can.

2. As there were those men in the land who brought tidings of joy and sorrow, and who walked the pathways and biways of the land laden with large sacks in which they carried that which was the queen's. Now these men, who were called by those who were irreverent among the people of Can, posties, were shaking their fists in anger at the decrees of the Big Chief who ruled from the hill in Ott, and hither and yon they dropped their sacks, yea for a day, to point out to the people of Can the error of the ways in which they were being treated by Eric, one of the henchmen of the Big Chief Waterhole.

3. And not only were those who carried sacks with that which was the queen's up in arms, but also those in the land of Osh who carried the leavings of the people of Osh to the leaving places, and those who kept the grass of Osh and the oases in the land of Osh green and fertile and trim, well, they were also balking at what they felt was no longer their just reward, but less than that.

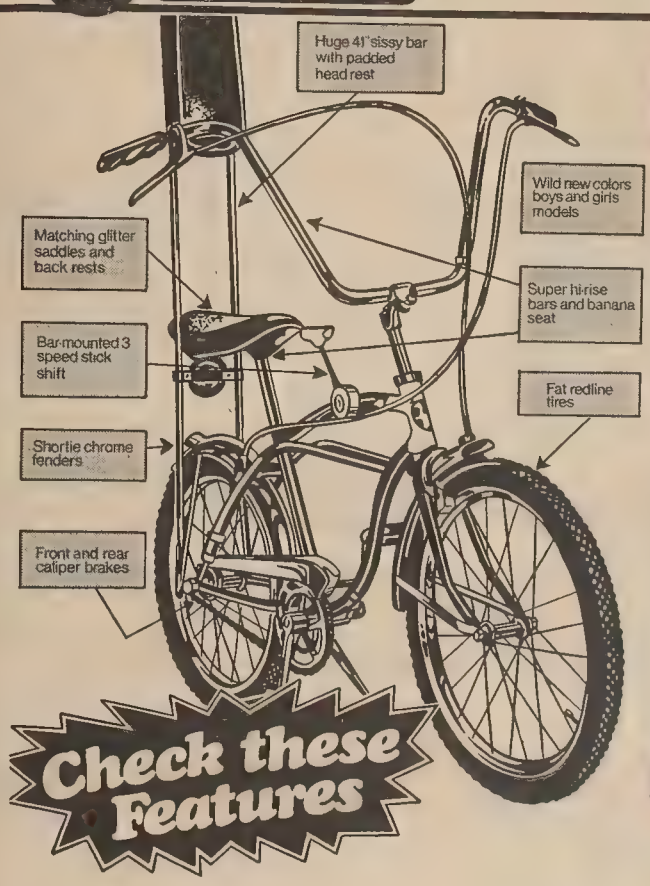
4. Moreover were those who labored in the carriage shops that abounded in the land of Osh warning the people they might pick up their signs and wonders and walk the face of the earth in the land of Osh carrying slogans. And this was called picketing, not to be confused with what the people in the land of Pick were prone to do.

5. And while the elders of the land of Osh were wrestling with the things that were to come to pass if those who carried the leavings of the people would carry no longer but tarry, other clouds of severity appeared in the sky of the elders of Osh.

6. For the Pickets, through their ruler Big John — not to be mistaken for the High and Mighty John — were saying once more to those who ruled from the holy mountain of Qupee, and to the elders of the land of Osh and the Pharaoh and Whit and his henchmen, verily, verily, we say unto you we shall all be Torites, before we shall let the land of the Picket be put asunder into chunks, parts of which will go the greater land of Metroboshawhit and part of which will go to the land of Tor, for the Pickets are one people and they have lived peacefully in the land of Pick for more than a hundred score years.

7. Now Charles the Physician among the elders of the land of Osh arose at a gathering of those who built tents and tabernacles in the land of Osh, and he girded his loins, and said unto the people, behold, the H and M John and his henchmen — and he spoke with reverence as behooved an elder in any of the lands of the region of Ont in that year — well, the H and M John and his servant Darcy and all those that are with them will be saying the final amen, and they will tell the Pickets, and the Oshites and the Bowmans and even the Pharaoh of Whit and his Whitites wherewithall they shall be merged and who shall be their leader. And Charles the Physician was the only spokesman at the gathering of elders and servants of the H and M John who spoke these words, for the other elders present and the Pharaoh saw the mighty ear of the H and M John inclining towards the people and lending itself to their supplication.

8. And on yet another front, the Wayward Beevee, chief ruler of the land of Osh journeyed through the land of Whit and spoke unto the people of Jax saying, behold, we must join hands and act all in one accord against the shadow of the masses which is about to cover the regions of the south of Ont and we must stand up and be counted and battle to protect our hills and our green grass in our valleys for our children and our children's children.



9. And many who heard the call of the Wayward Beevee said yea and amen to the words spoken by him.

10. And those who

25 years with works department

July 1 double celebration for Jack Johnstone

Jack Johnstone is a man who started at the bottom and worked his way up.

Twenty-five years ago this July 1, Jack Johnstone was cleaning sewers for the Board of Works. Today he is the general superintendent of the Maintenance Division of the Public Works Department.

During those 25 years Johnstone has seen a lot of changes.

Johnstone was 21 when he first started working for the City. He started off cleaning sewers; then loading and collecting garbage; went on the asphalt road repair crew; operated the roller; worked on sewer connection crews, traffic crew, became a working foreman covering road repairs, sidewalk construction, bridge repairs, culvert installations, traffic crew; became general foreman then acting road superintendent, road superintendent and finally general superintendent.

"I enjoyed every minute of it" says Johnstone. "Today I miss getting out but then, of course, I'm getting older too. I'm also getting a little fatter since I'm not getting the same amount of physical work."

Johnstone says today things in the Works Department are much more mechanized than when he started out. "Every trench" says Johnstone, "was dug by hand with pick and shovel. All the loading was done by hand. All the sewers were cleaned by hand. Now we have power shovels, front-end loaders and hydro-jets."

In 1945 when Johnstone was cleaning sewers he had nothing but a hand cart loaded with machinery he pushed from street to street. It took one day to do 700 feet of sewer. Today fully equipped trucks do the same work the carts did. Now 700 feet can be cleaned in a half hour.

Garbage in 1946 was picked up in open trucks with one man loading and one man on top of the pile packing it in. Seven yards of garbage could be loaded and packed in three hours. Today, two men load and don't have to lift any higher than their wastes. And instead of hand packing, an automatic plate in the back of the truck goes up and packs the garbage in. Now, 20 yards of garbage can be loaded and packed in two hours.

In 1947 when Johnstone worked on the asphalt road repair crew, the asphalt was rolled with a steel roller weighing 1500 pounds. Two men pushed it and two men pulled it. All the asphalt was cold mix and had to be mixed by hand by the crew. This took two days. To roll eight tons of asphalt took one day. Today, the Works Department uses nothing but hot mix asphalt purchased by the ton. Huge mechanized rollers roll the asphalt and now, 20 tons or more can be laid in one day.

In 1958 all bridge repair was done by hand scraping — now it's done by sand blasting and spraying. All culverts were excavated by hand. Now it's machine-done. At that time, with all the new building going on and the annexation of East Whitby in 1950, hundreds of culverts were installed. Now they're down to a bare minimum — last year the Works Department didn't put in any more than a total of six, says Johnstone.

"Even in those days" says Johnstone, "I enjoyed my work. Everybody I worked with carried their fair share of the work and there was the odd joke and so on. In fact the day was practically over before you realized it. I loved every minute of it."

Now that Johnstone has worked his way to the "top" does he treat his employees differently? "I always stuck with the men and we work together" says Johnstone. "I never had the attitude — 'I am the boss man' and I still have the same attitude today.

"You get a lot more out of the men by asking rather than by telling."

What are Johnstone's "old working buddies" doing today?

"There's not too many of them left" says Johnstone. "One fellow is now chief operator at the pollution control centre in Oshawa. The others are retired, the rest have died. There's only four of the 30 of us alive today.

"There's nobody around to talk things over with anymore. You like to reminisce, 'Remember the day we did this?' But there's no one around."

Forty-six year old Johnstone was born in Oshawa, went to Cedardale Public School and Oshawa Collegiate and Vocational Institute (now O'Neill Collegiate). He has a wife Irene and two children, Robert 23, and Ronnie, 15.

How is Johnstone going to celebrate Dominion Day combined with his 25th anniversary with the Works Department?

"Probably" says Johnstone, "I'll go to the cottage and cut the grass."

41 Students win Hislop scholarships

Forty-one grade eight students in the Oshawa Elementary Schools are being presented with the annual Fannie Hislop Scholarship Awards this week.

Miss Hislop, who died in 1935, left in her memory, $1,000 to be invested by the Oshawa Board of Education, the interest to be used annually to provide a prize for each school to be given to the student who takes highest standing in entrance examinations.

Since the scholarship was set up, the number of grade eight classes has increased to the point where the individual monetary award is now quite small. In some cases Home and School Associations supplement the amount. Receiving the award, however, indicates that the winners led their classes in academic achievement.

Fannie E. Hislop was appointed to the Albert Street Public School, Oshawa, in September 1877, shortly after the school was built. She gave unstintingly of her services to education for more than 45 years as principal of the school. She retired in 1924, and except for a six-month period in 1880 when she taught in the town of Listowel, her entire service was in the City of Oshawa.

Fannie Hislop Scholarship winners usually continue to show outstanding achievement in their secondary school careers and in university.

The 1970 winners are:

Beau Valley Public School, Lenore Camozzi.

The $90,000 air traffic control tower was another matter of strictly politics. It is not here for economic reasons but came just because of political pressure, said one protestor.

One resident asked Chairman DeHart what alternatives his committee could provide on relocation. Asked DeHart, "do you mean a regional airport? I would suggest Rama or Mara township, however I'm not an expert as to where it should be."

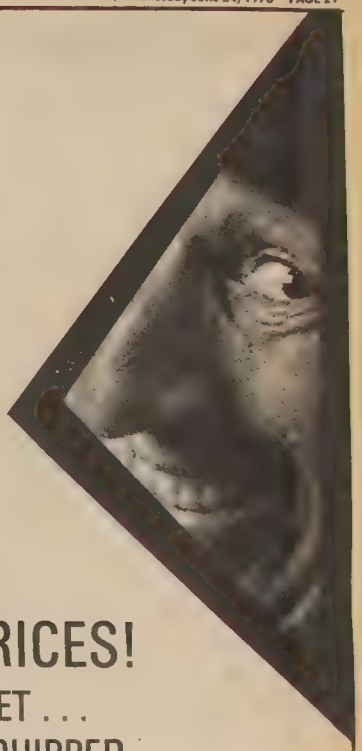
Another resident suggested the committee approach the Federal Government and have it donate the airport site to the City of Oshawa.

Shot out yet another resident "Why didn't we get Camp X for nothing?"

"How far has the city gone with this thing?" was another question.

Nobody knew the answer.

Alderman Gib Murdoch, who said he was attending the meeting as an observer and as a resident of the area adjacent to the airport, told the gathering no pressure had been brought to bear by the Federal Government to expand the airport. Any proposal to expand would come from City Council, he said, and is based on the Proctor-Redfern Report. It is now before the Parks, Property and Recreation Committee.



Doctor Barry Woods, a resident of the airport area, requested the committee to "come up with some facts". He said the gathering should decide to discuss either "what might happen" or "what we have today". He asked whether the intent of the meeting was to do away with the airport completely, or just stop any future expansion.

His question was not answered.

Dr. Woods disagreed with an earlier speaker who had branded a World War II Harvard as the noisiest noisemaker, by saying that the real culprit was the Beech 18.

YOUR CAR:

pollution spreader is being brought under control

Air pollution is like sin. Everybody is against it, but nobody really wants to give it up.

Also:

It is much easier to organize a conference on the quality of the environment than to stoop over and pick up a gum wrapper.

In the spirit of those quotes A. Ross Scott, GM staff project engineer, addressed the Oshawa Rotary Club this week.

Here's a summary of Scott's observations:

There is no question but that the nation's automobiles represent a major source of air pollution. Estimates by the federal government four years ago, when the Federal Clean Air Act was being written, showed the automobile responsible for some 60% of the major pollutants in the atmosphere, on the basis of tonnage. (Estimates based on government air quality standards from a health effect standpoint put the automobile's contribution at around 10%).

The reason for this discrepancy is that the principal gaseous compound emitted by automobiles — carbon monoxide — is not as harmful in the open air as many other contaminants. For example, government air quality standards based on health considerations show that it takes 220 tons of carbon monoxide to reach the level of concern of one ton of sulfur dioxide — which is emitted chiefly by coal and oil burning factories or power plants.

But, no matter whether you assume the automobile was responsible for 10% or 60% of the nation's air pollution problem four years ago, the output of carbon monoxide and unburned fuel emitted from automobiles has already passed its peak in the atmosphere, and is declining steadily.

This is because the controls we have developed so far are removing enough of those pollutants from newer cars to more than offset the growing number of cars on the road. Most people don't realize this — they just assume automotive pollution is increasing with the population explosion, like everything else.

SMOG PROBLEM

Fortunately, automotive engineers were at work on the emissions problem long before the passage of the Federal Clean Air Act. There are unique atmospheric conditions in Southern California, where the temperature inversion layer places a "lid" over the air in the Los Angeles coast plain. This condition gave us a preview of what can happen when more pollutants are emitted into the air than the air can handle.

The control techniques which were developed to help solve the Southern California photochemical smog problem are already beginning to pay clean air dividends across the country.

For example, 1970 model cars produced for California now have control systems for all major sources of emissions on an automobile — blowby gasses from the tail pipe, and evaporation from the gas tank and the carburetor. Most cars across the country are produced with most of these controls, and next year all new cars will have all of them.

These controls eliminate four-fifths of the hydrocarbons and two-thirds of the carbon monoxide, compared to uncontrolled cars.

Next year, California will require oxides of nitrogen controls by all automobile manufacturers. That should mean that the total automotive output of that type of pollutant also will "turn the corner" in the atmosphere, and begin to decline steadily. General Motors 1970 model cars nationwide already reduce oxides of nitrogen a year ahead of time.

A good way to measure the progress made so far is to say that if we went out into the parking lot and picked out an average uncontrolled car — 1962 model or earlier — and compared its emissions with a car with full control systems, we would find it would take five of the controlled cars to equal the hydrocarbon output of the uncontrolled model.

At the levels we expect from the next generation of control systems, now under development, it will take 20 new cars to equal the hydrocarbon output of the uncontrolled model.

MID SEVENTIES

The prospect of having unleaded gasoline available across the country opens up several encouraging avenues for advanced control techniques to get us down to those lower levels. We hope to have those new kinds of control systems on production cars by the mid-Seventies.

A. Ross Scott, staff project engineer, General Motors of Canada is a native of Toronto and a graduate in Mechanical Engineering from the University of Toronto. Joining General Motors of Canada upon graduation, he has served in many capacities in the Engineering Department, which includes the position of senior experimental engineer. In his present position, Scott is responsible for passenger car chassis and engine design, which includes emission control activities.

In this story, Scott describes the steps General Motors and other vehicle manufacturers have taken to reduce emissions from passenger cars, and outlines the further improvement that is expected from additional control systems by the mid-Seventies. He points out, for example, that emission control systems used on all 1970 cars produced for use in California eliminate four-fifths of the hydrocarbons and two-thirds of the carbon monoxide, compared to uncontrolled cars. All 1971 model cars will be equipped with these controls.

Among the systems we are evaluating are high temperature manifold reactors, catalytic chemical converters, exhaust gas recirculation and electronic fuel injection. In the past, we have been unable to make some of these approaches operate efficiently because of the effect of lead in the fuel. It contaminates catalytic converters, plugs recirculation systems, deteriorates some of the temperature-resistant materials used in manifold reactors, and causes progressively higher emissions as a result of lead deposits in the combustion chambers of the engine.

General Motors has done a great deal of research as to the effects of various fuels on the level and types of emissions from automobiles. We were invited to report on our experimental results with unleaded gasolines at a seminar called recently by the governor of California, and attended by representatives of petroleum companies. We found that the results of current research by petroleum company scientists do not materially differ from our findings.

General Motors has decided that, starting with the 1971 models, all GM engines will be designed with lower compression ratios and other characteristics which will permit them to operate satisfactorily on 91 octane level fuel.

This move to lower compression ratios and lower octane gasolines will bring with it a slight reduction in thermal efficiency and a corresponding small reduction in gasoline mileage, but we believe the disadvantages will be relatively small compared to the many emissions control advantages it will bring — and we think this most certainly is a move in the right direction.

The automobile was first identified with the photo-chemical smog problem in 1952.

In the Fifties the whole subject of photochemical smog and atmospheric chemistry was virtually unexplored, and most of the delicate measuring instruments which would later reveal some of the secrets of the air around us were not yet developed. It took years to master the analytical techniques — in both government and industry. And even today there are some mysteries about air chemistry which are only beginning to be understood.

TRACE AMOUNTS

In measuring automobile exhuasts, we are dealing with parts per million. And in studying the atmosphere — parts per billion. These are trace amounts so small it's hard to comprehend them.

A good parts-per-million comparison is Ivory Soap, which once advertised 99-44/100% as the symbol of attainable mass-produced purity. But 99-44/100% pure turns out to be 5,600 parts-per-million impure, many times higher than the concentrations we are dealing with in the exhaust stream.

An impurity of 1 part per billion is equal to only 3.6 obnoxious individuals on the face of the earth. And we all know that isn't true!

Our search for better power plants has been under way for many years. The gas turbine program began in 1947: The Stirling engine program began in 1957. The electric drive program began in 1959. We have been working with steam, off and on, since 1930.

Today, General Motors Research Laboratories devotes from one-third to one-half of its research effort to alternative power plants and vehicle emissions. Some 400 to 500 scientists and technicians are involved in this effort, on our research staff alone.

other small green areas throughout the city. Kennedy sees the possibility of beautifying the downtown area through landscaping as it is redeveloped.

And then too, he can claim great and unexpected success in getting rid of unsightly and dangerous trees suffering from Dutch Elm disease. A winter works program for cutting down and burning diseased trees began six years ago and three years ago, the commissioner says, he pretty well gave up hope of controlling the spread of disease. Today the situation is well under control and he feels his department can keep on top of the situation as part of its routine duties.

Besides looking after the parks and beautification of the city, the parks, property commissioner also supervises the operation of the city animal shelter, the cemeteries and maintenance of all city buildings. Kennedy has recently taken on a new area in the person of the property officer. When the assessment department was absorbed by the new provincial assessment departments, the city's real estate director was assigned to the parks, property department.

All electric car wouldn't solve pollution problem either

There are hundreds more on other staffs and in the manufacturing divisions.

Some of the avenues we are exploring are extremely promising. However, it isn't just a matter of looking for a low emissions power source to replace the internal combustion engine. We now know we can get the internal combustion emissions down to extremely low levels. So it is more a question of "which one of these extremely low emitters will do the best transportation job for the Canadian public?"

Sometimes, a vehicle which appears to be a low emitter turns out to make things worse in the atmosphere. As an example look at the electric car. It's a little complicated, but it will illustrate the importance of looking at these problems from the standpoint of the overall effect.

The Electrovair II is a battery-driven car with a highly efficient motor and control system. It can easily attain freeway speeds and has a range of about 80 miles on a full electric charge. True, it has pretty expensive batteries — with about $25,000 worth of silver — and like any electric car, doesn't perform nearly as well in hilly country or in cold weather. But breakthroughs in battery development could help solve those problems.

ALL-ELECTRIC, THEN WHAT?

The question is, if we were to replace all the gasoline-driven cars in a city with electric cars, what could we expect to happen in the atmosphere?

If you think about a whole city full of electric cars being plugged in for re-charging, you can see that we would have to generate vast amounts of additional electric power. The power generating capacity of most urban areas is already severely strained and is expected to be even more critical in the future. Building the new power plants to supply the needed battery power would, in effect, simply transfer the emissions problem from the tail pipe of the automobile to the smokestack of the power plant. Indeed, the effect of emissions might be worse. A generating plant burning fuel of the average sulfur content would emit four-tenths of a pound of sulfur dioxide every day for every car battery it has to charge — compared to the two pounds of carbon monoxide emitted by a current model gasoline engine in an average day's use. Based on government air quality standards, we could find ourselves about 40 times worse off than with the automobile exhaust problem, from a health effect standpoint.

"Air pollution like sin; everybody is against it, but nobody really wants to give it up . . ."

So let's say we build tall stacks on power plants, so the sulfur dioxide will be vented into the atmosphere much higher than the pedestrian breathing zone. They did that in Britain. But, across the North Sea, the Scandinavian countries were pelted by rains and snows with a high content of sulfuric acid — formed when sulfur dioxide mixes with moisture.

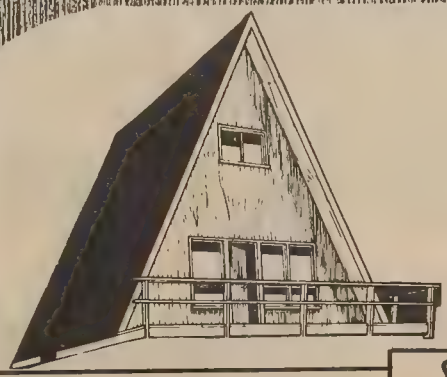
So let's build atomic power plants. But nuclear plants reject huge amounts of heat, in the form of hot water. Emptied into lakes, rivers and oceans, that creates "thermal pollution", because it raises the temperature of the body of water, and marine life can be affected. Also, the problem of disposing of radioactive waste on a large scale is not fully solved.

Although battery powered cars seem to have little potential as general purpose vehicles, General Motors transportation engineers are exploring the possibility of using very small electric vehicles in specialized downtown situations. A breakthrough in fuel cell technology would allow us to create electric energy chemically, within the vehicle.

Also, we shouldn't imply that control of emissions from electric utilities isn't moving forward.

Techniques for handling both nuclear waste and thermal pollution are being perfected by electric power utilities. Engineers at a General Motors plant learned that they can use the sulfur dioxide from the plant's powerhouse stacks to neutralize chromates in the waste disposal system — thus eliminating two unwanted pollutants in one mutually beneficial operation.

VARIOUS POWER SOURCES



We are continuing our studies of various other sources of power. In their present state of development, none can do as good a job as the internal combustion engine in providing all-purpose transportation at low emissions levels. However, some appear promising as special purpose vehicles. The closest one to commercial application right now is the gas turbine, which is an extremely attractive power plant for high torque uses such as heavy trucks and large buses.

We are not just looking at new cars, but also are developing exhaust control systems for older models, now being tested in California. And we have perfected some simple engine maintenance techniques which will significantly reduce emissions from cars of all ages.

General Motors has pledged its research and engineering facilities to solve the problem from every angle — old cars and new — improved control systems or alternative forms of power — so that the automobile will no longer be a significant source of air pollution anywhere.

Kiddies' column

There is a baby moose named Janzen
Who was born of a magic race
He would say, "I wish it. I wish it"
And could travel to anyplace

One day it was hot and sunny
Because it was summer, you see
But Janzen was very unhappy
For he was as hot as could be

"I wish it. I wish it" he said
"To Alaska I wish to go
"Where the weather is cold and chilly
And I can lie in heaps of snow"

So to Alaska he went
As fast as the north wind blows
With the rustle of penguins' feet
And the crunch of northern ice flows

Wrapped in muffler and mitts
To keep him through the day
And clad in knee-high boots
He headed on his way

He met an Eskimo woman
Whose name was Sue Muckluck
She asked him to her igloo
And in the door he got stuck

After he finally broke free
With a hearty grunt and a moan
His mouth began to water
And his stomach began to groan

"I'm hungry" said Janzen aloud
"I want a special dish"
But all he could find in Alaska
Was only uncooked fish

"I'm brave" said baby Janzen
Who was hungry and so cold
"I won't give up just yet
As an adventurer I am bold"

As the words just left his mouth
A strong wind carried them away
And the wind turned into a blizzard
That lasted the rest of the day

When the strong storm finally subsided
And the sky was once more clear
Poor Janzen lay in a heap Saying, "Oh dear, Oh dear. Oh dear."

"I wish it. I wish it" he said
To home I wish to go
Where the weather is warm and sunny
And where there isn't any snow

And to his home he went
With the tune of a robin's song
With the buzzing of busy bees
And a brook that bubbles along

"I love this sunny weather
Said Janzen, "It's so much fun"
He then put on his sunglasses
And lay on his back in the sun

P.S. Janzen lives at the Bowmanville Zoo

Games effort in high gear

By Peter Brouwer
editor

Officials in charge of the Canada Summer Games have a tiger by the tail. That's obvious, as enthusiasm for this all-Canada effort is snowballing from a relatively simple beginning in Centennial Year in Quebec City, thence to Halifax Dartmouth, next to Saskatoon, and perhaps Oshawa.

John J. Hunnius, one of the men who'll decide whether Oshawa will be the best location for the Canada Summer Games in 1973, visted here on the weekend. Over a cup of coffee at the Gerogian, Saturday morning, he talked about the "tremendous increase in enthusiasm" for the games and that Oshawa is a front-runner in the contest of Ontario cities trying to attract the games.

Look at it this way, says Hunnius, there was one bid from Quebec City for the first games, there were seven for the next series that ended up in Halifax-Dartmouth, 14 cities bid for the series granted to Saskatoon and there are 31 bids for this fourth series.

MORE, BIGGER

Public interest is running higher and higher, Hunnius says, and eventually he foresees an increase in the frequency of the games and expansion of the program.

With some 3,000 participants per series, about 600,000 others are involved in the competition that leads up to the trials to participate in the Summer Games, "and this is what's stimulating tremendous activity," says Hunnius.

"Mass participation" is the name of this game, and it's at a level where any group in the country can enter a

Study of future secret

Oshawa, Whitby and area residents will have a pretty good indication of what the local government future holds by the middle of this months.

While planners are putting the final touches to the third portion of the massive Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study, politicians here, in Whitby and in the other communities involved are already discussing the "how and where's" of the various schemes proposed.

But "what's what" is a deep dark secret until the middle of July, and the politicians are planning to keep it that way.

Oshawa council met behind closed doors Monday evening "to discuss current developments in the OAPADS study." That's how Mayor Bruce Mackey summed it up

In a news release from the mayor's office Tuesday, Mackey said "the meeting was held in camera because the council discussed with the staff committee some aspects of the study contained in the working drafts of the Third Discussion Paper and because it had previously been decided by the OAPADS executive committee not to publicly release the contents of the Third Paper until the executive committee meeting of July 16."

Mayor Mackey, who is an outspoken opponent of "in camera meetings" said the one this week was "useful" in that it brought about an exchange of information between the technical staff and council and that council members were brought up to date on the progress of the various OAPADS sub committees.

Some observers have interpreted the closed doors session of council as necessary so Oshawa could map its strategy in relation to the area west of Whitby which is also part of the OAPADS study.

Murder trial to be in adult court

The 15-year-old charged under the Juvenile Delinquent Act in connection with the murder of 19-year old Gail Ruth Mohns will be tried in adult court. The youth has been charged with non-capital murder.

Following a two-hour hearing, Friday, Judge R. B. Baxter granted an application by the crown attorney to move the case to adult court.

Terence Kelly, Oshawa defence counsel did not contest the application.

SHORT TAKES

HONOR MRS. CONANT

Mrs. Verna Conant of Oshawa, wife of the late Gordon Conant, former premier of Ontario was made a "Commander Sister" by the Ontario Council, Order of St. John. Mrs. Conant has been active in the order for many years. In 1939 she organized the first St. John Ambulance Division in Oshawa. Governor General Michener is expected to confer the honor in the Fall.

POOLS OPEN

As of Saturday all the city's outdoor swimming pools were officially open. Jim Smart director of water recreation for the city says he expects another "great season." Last summer 54,000 people took advantage of the city's outdoor pools.

MISS OSHAWA

Nearly $1,000 in prize money is being put up this year for Miss Oshawa, the princess of the Oshawa Fair. The contest is slated for July 23, opening day of the Fair, at Alexandra Park. It's open to single girls, age 16 to 21, who live in the area from Ajax to Bowmanville, Deadline for entries is Monday, July 6, and forms are available at CKLB Radio and Gambles, Midtown Mall.

DRUG SESSIONS

The Ontario County Separate School Board is sending four representatives to a five-day conference on addiction studies to be held at McMaster University, Hamilton, in August. A principal, a guidance counsellor, a superintendent and a special education teacher will attend, it was announced by Edward Finan, superintendent.

50TH WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. David McCann of Oshawa celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary last week at a tea given by their children.

The McCanns were married in Marmora, June 23, 1920, and have lived in Oshawa all of their married life. Before his retirement McCann, of Court Street, was an employee at Pedlar's. There are three daughters, two sons and 14 grandchildren.

HONOR BAND

A section of Camp Samac has been named after the Texas Golden Eagle Marching Band. It visited Oshawa a few months ago and gave a concert at Eastdale. Following the concert band members enjoyed a dance with local students at the Camp. On their return to Texas, band members raised $100 for Camp Samac to help underprivileged scouts buy equipment. "Brownsville Golden Eagle Site," is the name of the new spot at the camp.

DEPARTMENT HEAD

Mervyn Everall is the new head of the English Department at Anderson Collegiate. Everall was an English teacher at Lindsay and a member of the Lindsay Town Council. He is also an Anglican minister and was an NDP candidate in two general elections in Victoria-Haliburton riding.

PROMOTED

Bill Smith, former attendance counsellor with the Ontario County Board of Education has been promoted to administrative assistant to George Roberts, Director of Education. Smith will be especially in charge of drug education and the community use of schools program.

EXTRA STAFF

Board of Control last week approved the hiring of extra staff for six months to cope with the workload of the city's social services department. Herb Cheeseborough, the department's director, says welfare cases handled by his department have increased by over 50 per cent during the past month.

TO NEW ZEALAND

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Norman O'Reilly of Oshawa are off to New Zealand in September to join the New Zealand Forest Service and the Rotorua Public Library. Both are recent graduates from the University of Toronto. The couple live on Dover Street.

DEBENTURES

Twenty-year debentures to raise $1,721,000 for the construction of three new schools were authorized by the Ontario County Board of Education last week. The three projects, now under construction, are: Chaleur Ave. Public School, Central Park Senior Public School and the Brechin Public School.

HEADS NO MORE

Doug Butler, 19, of Oshawa is reported to be on his way to the Yukon to find a job, now that his Toronto-based drug education service called "Organized Heads" has disbanded. The organization was warned by Metropolitan Toronto police that members were giving out "dangerous advice." Butler and two other teenagers had set up the group as a 24-hour telephone service offering instant analysis of pills after listening to their description over the telephone to youths who wanted to know what they were taking.

team. "Maximum participationhat the bottom part of the pyramid," Hunnius calls it, "with team events rather than individuals being stressed."

Hunnius took the weekend to tour Oshawa facilities with Terry Kelly, Mayor Bruce Mackey and Oshawa's Canada Games Committee. He saw all of what makes Oshawa an ideal site for the Games.

Toronto and Winnipeg have been turned down for the 1973 games. The most important criteria used in picking a site for the games is the local need for sports facilities.

On his tour with Kelly and the committee, Hunnius saw what Oshawa has got, and what it would get if this city does end up with the 1973 version.

INCENTIVE

The greatest need in amateur sports, according to Hunnius, is an incentive for the amateur athlete to compete. "This is what the games and good facilities can do." He pointed to the festival atmosphere of the games as an encouragement.

The concept of the Canada Games grew out of a study by the federationin the late 50's aimed at setting up athletic facilities across Canada. Hunnius said the federation soon found there wasn't enough money available to fill the needs of the whole country. By staging the Games every two years in various places, it was felt the need for facilities could be gradually built up.

Hunnius, a Montreal executive, is one of the founders of the Canadian Amateur Sports Federation. But even apart from sports, the Canada Games serve an important function, he says, in that people from across Canada get together, making for a "real force of unity."

Kelly called the weekend visit by Hunnius "most helpful." He and his committee were impressed with federation president's knowledge, which would ensure that "the community awarded the games will be the one with the best facilities."

Hunnius is one of four men who will decide where the 1973 games will be held.

Kelly and committee are in the process of preparing a brief which must be submitted by the middle of this month for consideration by the choosing officials.

Since Board of Control last week approved a budget of $850,000 in capital works, Kelly has been enthusiastic about the possibilities for Oshawa.

"Getting facilities worth $1,550,000 for an investment of just slightly more than half-price is a great opportunity," Kelly said. With a projected population of the area showing rapid increases, the facilities left here after the games would be "needed at any rate."

INVENTORY

What would the games bring?

- a $900,000 50-meter indoor pool with all the facilities for swimming, diving and water polo.
- eight new all-weather tennis courts costing $125,000.
- $450,000 in improved and added facilities for track and field, softball, baseball, field hockey, soccer and handball, including a portable grandstand for 7,200 spectators.

New swimming facilities are to be located south of the Centennial Pool. Improvements to track and field would be made at the existing and proposed facilities at the Civic Auditorium area, bringing them up to Olympic standards.

Other improvements would be made to parks already used in various areas of the city.

The remainder of the $1.5 million expenditure is footed equally by provincial and federal governments.

The federal government also underwrites all operating costs of the games, including transportation and accommodation of athletes and officials.

At the Board of Control meeting last week, Controller Margaret Shaw called the Games-for-Oshawa "the greatest opportunity and privilege ever." The great majority of the community it appears from initial reactions, agrees with Mrs. Shaw.

Uni-Appeal campaign underway

Initial United appeal canvassing of Oshawa-Whitby industries is already underway, with first contact expected to be made this week.

A team of 40 volunteers, headed by Robert Wilson of General Motors, is working toward an objective of $138,000 in contributions from local industries and corporations.

This figure represents approximately 30 to 35 per cent of the $456,589 total Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal target for this year.

Corporate canvass team members participated in an intensified training session at Durham College, conducted by Dr. Gordon E. Willey, college president.

The corporate canvass should be completed by the end of August, according to W. C. Paynter, chairman of the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal Public Relations Committee. Paynter said canvassers will begin calling on Oshawa-Whitby residents early in September to achieve the $456,589 objective by the end of October.

Paynter also stressed that United Appeal funds donated by Oshawa-Whitby residents will remain in the community to help support local member organizations of the United Appeal. and that as in the past, none of the volunteer canvassers will receive any payment for their efforts.

24 per cent wage hike for firemen

A two-year contrac settlement giving a firs class fireman a 24 pe cent wage hike to $10,24 in 1971, was accepted b Board of Control las week.

Firemen, according t Gary Hooper, bargainin committee chairman ratified the new agree ment by 60 per cent.

Commenting on the 2 per cent increase, Hoope was quoted as saying th six percent federal wag guidelines are not mea ingful in terms of othe settlements, and that th government has no bus ness telling an employe and his employee what their business.

The agreement is st to be approved by ci council at its next mee ing.

SAFEST

Oshawa Police la week picked the safe patrol of St. Franc School as the best overa patrol in the city. As reward, 23 patroller received jackets.

Sunday store opening - all or none

We have heard and read much about the sacriligious behavior of Sunnybrook Food Market in having the effrontery to open on Sunday. Church leaders seem to be in the vanguard of the protestors — we wonder why. What are they afraid of? Competition? If so, perhaps they ought to put some real muscle into their sermon instead of trying to read into tracts of Jewish history something that was never there.

Take the 10 commandments at their face value; Christians by an large abide by these laws. Accordingly, the commandment that they would probably say is being broken is the one that states "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it Holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work: but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not to any work." It looks like an open and shut case.

Sunnybrook is open, its employees working, they are transgressing. Burn them at the stake? It would be a fitting example to the rest of those heretics who lie in bed on a Sunday morning, or worse, persue the mortal pleasures of going to the cottage.

But wait a moment, the churches need electricity to conduct their services, their organs need it to blow air, vicars need it to light the light on the lectern. Somebody, must be working, probably at Niagara Falls or at Hearn Generating Plant, or maybe both places. Well, you might say, essential services are different; Hydro, police, fire department, the men who man the snow machines that plough out the church parking lots early on Sunday mornings — that's quite different from Sunnybrook.

We disagree — surely by Christianity's own mores everyone is equal under the law. If the church protests the work done by Sunnybrook employees, they must, if they are to apply their teachings equitably to all forms of work, condemn the hydro workers, firemen, policemen, et al.

So, who in the community cannot do without these essential services as they have to work all day Sunday? The churches, that's who. (Sure, we all use them, but only because they happen to be available.) The churches need the police to direct the traffic in and out of the parking lot, the fire department in case the altar candles fall over and start a fire, and hydro to provide the heating and lighting.

So what does all this boil down to? It boils down to as insidious a form of discrimination as it has been our misfortune to witness. The churches, and all they are supposed to stand for, are in our opinion, downright hypocritical on this issue. The law they preach must apply to ALL or no-one if it is no longer relevant. The clergy choose to say nothing about all the variety stores and milk stores which abound throughout the city and which many find so convenient. And, which also sell exactly the same goods on a smaller scale as Sunnybrook. Nor do they mention the gas stations, or the restaurants, or the marinas in the cottage country which are all open for business on a Sunday.

Putting the boot on the other foot, Sunnybrook could argue that the real reason the churches protest their opening on a Sunday, is that it is hitting their attendance?

Surely the clergy's role is to guide their flock, not to take a position and by exerting pressure, force their views on others. If you really want to argue a fine point, the Sabbath, according to Jewish custom, falls on a Saturday, so the clergy are on pretty shaky ground condemning someone who works on a Sunday.

Finally, there is a passage in the bible which states "Judge not that ye be judged" — this applies to the clergy as well as everyone else. If the Almighty is as uptight about Sunnybrook opening on a Sunday as the clergy would have us believe, we are sure He will do something about it in His own good time using His own methods. You are indeed selling Him extremely short if you feel He has no hope of coping with the situation without the help of our personal interventions.

The airport and the games

It has occurred to us and likely to many readers, that the antics of the sink-the-airport crowd are in direct contradiction to the objectives of Oshawa's committee to secure the Canada Summer Games.

One of the ace amenities in the city's hand when negotiating for the Games, is the presence of the airport close to the proposed site of the Games. It is only reasonable to expect a large number of spectators and competitors will, if we are favored with the Games, and if we still have an airport, arrive by air. This point will not be lost on the Canadian Amateur Sports Federation and federal officials when they decide on the site of the 1973 Games.

Accordingly, the committee should be given by council, confirmation without further delay, that not only can they count on the airport still being in existence in 1973, but that it will be extended in time for the Games to provide a greater margin of safety for aircraft using the field.

Please, Pavlov , go away!

A source of noise pollution which is in our opinion, far more dangerous than the noise of airplanes, is the sound inflicted on by by the Good Humour Man, alias the Jolly Jingle Man.

Every night he comes charging up the street with all bells clanging like some latter day Pied Piper of Hamlin. All the kiddies for blocks around come racing up, their dimes clutched in their hot little hands. It reminds us of Pavlov and his dogs. You will recall that Pavlov, when he fed his dogs, always rang a bell. In time, the dogs began to associate the bell with food. Later, he rather unsportingly just rang the bell and didn't produce any food, but because the dogs had been conditioned to associate food with the ringing of the bell, they automatically drooled when they heard the bell.

The spectacle of the kiddies running towards the J. J. Man's truck reminds us very much of Pavlov's dogs. Frankly, who needs the J. J. Man? The day is going to come when one of these youngsters in his haste to reach the J. J. Man and secure a goodie, will be knocked down by a car he didn't see.

Do we really need ice cream to be sold door to door? The noise pollution and the inherent hazard that the J. J. Man threatens, is in our opinion something we could well do without.

We're looking for real reform

The Ontario Government has presented an interesting set of proposals for tax reform in Canada, taking issue with certain of Mr. Benson's white paper recommendations and urging positive steps to create a healthy economy within limits.

It would be impossible to deal with the whole range of provincial tax policies put forward by Provincial Treasurer Charles MacNaughton. However, his theory — and presumably that of the Robarts administration — on the intent and extent of new taxation measures as expressed in the section of his brief entitled "Tax Reform and Revenues" is worthy of comment in this space.

MacNaughton declares that the main purpose of taxation is to raise revenues in order to finance public services. In reforming the income tax system, therefore, the question of how much revenue should be raised is absolutely critical for a number of reasons:

- A reformed tax system obviously must generate sufficient revenues now and in the future to finance existing public programs. The provinces as well as the federal government have a vital interest in changes in income taxation, particularly the personal income tax because of its

It's going to be a little of everything this week, from a space-age bartender to flying to alcoholism and dirty cars, so here goes:

The age of the computer is catching up with the bartender. Highlight of a recent trade show reported by "Canadian Hotel & Restaurant" was a machine developed by National Cash Register Co. to put pouring drinks on a par with filling gas tanks. Innkeepers were acutely aware that while gas stations use a highly-accurate machine to dispense a product that costs about 50 cents a gallon, bartenders still pour by hand liquor worth $100 a gallon. Even a thimbleful extra in every glass or so can be costly. NCR's new Electra-Bar is designed to keep the situation under control and to perform all drink-pouring functions in less than two seconds. When the appropriate key is punched, the equipment determines whether the ingredients for the desired drink are available, pours them into the proper glass and makes a complete bookkeeping record of the transaction.

Low Cost Housing

The old and the handicapped, rather than the unemployed and the low-paid, are the Canadian poor who need low-income housing most, according to Robert Andras, federal minister responsible for housing. The government's low-income housing policies "must be reconsidered" on the basis of preliminary findings of a federal study on urban problems, he said, and added that the study also shows that those too old or unable to work have been ignored by present and past policies.

AA boosts BB

Alcoholics Anonymous is considered the most effective single outside agency in helping companies help employees with drinking problems, according to a study in "Modern Purchasing."

A growing number of companies are setting up programs to help their workers overcome drinking problems, according to the study, as a result of a significant shift in management attitudes toward employee alcoholism. The trend is away from punishment (often dismissal) and toward rehabilitation. The new approach is away from moral judgments and toward improvement of job performance. Some 60 per cent of drinkers who accept curative treatment are helped and able to keep their jobs; it's estimated that from 3 to 5 per cent of an average company's employees are alcoholics or have a drinking problem. The new approach often forces the drinker to come to grips with his problem sooner and accept the help he needs, the study reports.

Primary aims of company programs are to: lower costs, reduce absenteeism, improve production, increase safety, assure sounder decision-making, retain the services of employees, lift morale by helping those who need it, and replacing ineffective disciplinary action with more effective methods.

It takes two years of non-drinking before an employee is considered rehabiliated, whether he is a worker in the plant or an executive in the front office, the study says. And union support is vital to the success of any program in plants with collective-bargaining agreements.

Dirty Cars

A recent study carried out in Canada by an automobile manufacturing firm found that a clean car can prevent police spot check inconveniences and an assortment of minor traffic tickets.

Editor Jim Young of Design Engineering quotes a senior Toronto police officer as having put it this way:

"Trained officers are automatically and immediately suspicious of a very dirty car — particularly when conditions are dry and most cars are clean.

"Long experience has shown that in many cases the driver behind the wheel of a grimy car may be up to no good — or has recently been up to no good."

Low Cost School

Some suburban Toronto children should be able to get to school on time if a plan being considered by the Metro Toronto Separate School Board goes through. The school board may approach builders to see if any are interested in building a school within an apartment complex — the first in Canada — on a two-acre site in the suburbs.

The school board's architects say the best use of the site would be an eight-room school, with space to expand to 20 classrooms, built on the first two floors of an 11-storey apartment house. Provincial and municipal approval is pending.

The board would continue as the owner of the site and would pay for the school section of the building. It could save as much as $235,000 by leasing part of the site to the developer, the architects say.

The partment-school idea, on the surface, sounds like a very logical appraoch to cutting down the skyrocketing costs of school buildings. Now that the kids are home for the summer, perhaps we should all sit down and ponder this one. Your member of the Ontario County Board of Education will no doubt appreciate your comments.

importance for revenues, stabilization and a balanced tax mix.

- The level of taxation, particularly of income taxes and taxes on capital, has a major bearing on private savings, investment and enterprise. An increase in taxes on income and capital, under a reformed system, could seriously reduce private savings and investment, the key requirements for economic growth and prosperity in Canada in the years ahead.
- Taxpayers are looking forward to real tax reform not tax increases. It would be a cruel deception to promise the former and deliver the latter.

Having said this, MacNaughton and his government take the position that a tax reform program should produce no increase in revenue, a position also adopted by the Carter Commission. By contrast, he points out, the federal white paper amounts to an exercise in large-scale tax increases by the federal government, at least $630 million worth according to their own estimates. Alarmingly, MacNaughton's department has worked out the revenue gains to more than double this figure, or over $1.4 billion.

The provincial treasurer labels proposed tax increases on such a massive scale as "totally unwarranted," undermining the basic purpose of reform. In short, the Ontario approach is that tax reforms should meet the needs of the taxpayer first and the government's second.

The current federal surplus of $250 million for 1970-71 — it would be much larger if the economy were operating at full employment — and the course adopted by the United States in reducing tax revenues are cited in questioning Ottawa's proposals.

With such surplus fiscal capacity already at hand, why should the federal government seek huge additional revenues as part of its tax reform program, MacNaughton asks. He suggests that tax increases should be proposed and legislated on their own merits, and not implemented under the guise of tax reform. Indeed, he contends that national tax reform should aim to reduce taxes.

By contrast, the recent United States tax reform legislation entailed a substantial reduction in federal tax revenues and a reduced claim on the gross national product. The treasurer thinks Canada should be moving in a similar direction — "the best guarantee to taxpayers that there will be some control of public spending is to leave resources in the hands of the people."

The hard-pressed taxpaying public will concur in MacNaughton's concluding remarks in this section of his tax reform presentation, that the national reform package be designed to produce no net revenue gains to government.

Asthma is subject at TB-RD annual

Dr. Cameron C. Gray was guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Ontario County Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association. Gray is Executive Medical Director, Ontario Thoracic Society. About 230 members attended, along with special guests and representatives of about 40 agencies and organizations.

Gray's topic of discussion was on Asthma — Myths, Mysteries and Management. To the question — does everyone have an allergy? — Gray stated that estimates of the prevalence of allergy have varied from 3-5 per cent to almost 60 percent. It has been generally estimated that about 10 percent of the general population have some sort of allergic disease. Asthma and hay fever are on the rise. Prior to 1940 it was 3 percent; 1957-58 — 4.8 percent; 1965-67 — 8.2 percent; 1967 — 69 — 10 percent.

Asthma may be contracted at any time from infancy to old age. The incidence is highest in the first decade of life during which time approximately 30 per cent of all cases become apparent. During the second, third and fourth decades the rate of occurence is approximately constant with about 10 per cent of all cases beginning in each decade. Onset during the fifth and sixth decade is less common and after the age of 60 relatively infrequent.

Gray spoke of some of the ridiculous myths regarding the cure for asthma. There is a myth that states that asthma occurs chiefly in so-called nervous people. Apparently there is no particular type of person who develops asthma. The disease occurs in the weak and the strong, the scrawny and the corpulent, the phlegmatic and the temperamental — those of large and small stature, as well as the dark and light complexioned.

There is a myth that indicates asthma leads to emphysema. Gray stated that while emphysema may be associated with asthma, evidence accumulated over the years indicates that asthma rarely, if ever, leads to emphysema. When the two conditions occur together, it usually happens to the person who has been smoking 20 cigarettes a day for 20 years or more, and therefore the patient has the set-up for developing chronic bronchitis and emphysema. The evidence on the other side of the coin points out that the non-smoking asthmatic does not develop emphysema.

Gray in speaking of management of the patient, referred to asthma retraining, reconditioning rehabilitation programmes for children and adults. Programmes consist of education to the patient as well as the parents and families. The effect on the latter may be the greatest benefit of the program. In any event the asthmatic becomes better adjusted, more involved in social and athletic activities. In addition they lose less time from work and school, have fewer hospital admissions, doctors' visits and reduced medication requirements.

It is found that fear lessens, control improves, confidence grows and though the myths and mysteries persist the patient accepts his disease better and adjusts to life more normally.

The speaker was introduced by Dr. John Chmara, Case Finding and Program Development Chairman of the Ontario County TB-RD Association.

Dr. C. W. L. Jeanes, Executive Director, Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association congratulated the County Association for establishing the TB-RD Clinic in Midtown Mall — the first of its kind in Canada.

Another first for the Association will be the formation of a Junior TB-RD Association — recommended by the Nominating Committee.

The following executive was appointed at the annual meeting: President, Mrs. C. D. Russell, Oshawa; Immed. Past President, Mr. John Martin, Beaverton; Vice-President and Representative to ORTDA, Mr. J. Whiting, Brooklin; Vice-President, Mr. C. E. Morley, Pickering; Vice-President, Mrs. R. W. Shier, Sunderland; Treasurer, Mr. W. J. Sendall, Oshawa.

NEW STAFF

FRANK RUTTER

Frank H. Rutter has joined THIS WEEK's retail advertising staff. He comes to the Oshawa-Whitby area from Toronto where he was assistant advertising manager of the Metro Mirror. Rutter holds a B.Sc. degree in mathematics and diplomas in marketing and graphic design. He has worked in the advertising agency and newspaper business for 18 years, beginning in England. He emigrated to Canada in October 1965 and lives in a farmhouse which he and his family have remodelled in the Village of Vallantyne, between Sunderland and Lake Simcoe.

Hospital cases up 3,500

Construction of the new wing of the Oshawa General Hospital is proceeding on schedule, but the November 1971 opening will come none too soon as far as harried hospital official are concerned.

Admissions to the hospital in the first five months of this year increased by 3,500 over the same period last year — 1,000 of them in the hard-pressed emergency department.

Outpatient admissions — for emergency treatment, x-rays, and minor treatments — rose by 16 per cent over the five-month period.

Total admissions for the first five months were 30,568, compared to 27,057

SOME MEDICINES DEMAND CONTROLLED ENVIRONMENT

The atmosphere around us has become a very popular topic and air pollution, ecology, etc., have thus become very familiar terms. In a pharmacy, we have always been especially concerned with the close control of the environment because so many of the medicines we stock are susceptible to atmospheric changes.

Just as changes in heat, light, cold, humidity, most definitely effect our normal way of living, so too can they effect the life cycle or potency of a great many drugs. As a pharmacist, we must know how to best protect every medicine so that when it reaches the patient it is ready to perform as the doctor intends.

Come off it, editor!

Sir:

In regards to your Editorial "Come off it, John De Hart and Co."

Why don't you come off it!

If it weren't for men like Mr. De Hart and groups like the Civic Affairs Committee, we ordinary citizens wouldn't have a chance.

It's darned good to see someone fighting for us, not like some of those clods on city council who are getting paid to serve us and who do absolutely nothing for the citizens of Oshawa.

Mr. De Hart said that he didn't expect the airport to be moved, but that it not be extended or enlarged. I don't think that's too much to ask.

You make the people in the airport area sound like a bunch of ignoramuses. That's a great way to make friends, or don't you care!

AIM OF REGIONAL STUDY

All-out combat against monstrous megalopolis

The last thirty years of the 20th century brings promise of wide-ranging changes for the city of Oshawa.

In the 50s and 60s, Oshawa emerged from the small city group and entered adolescence. The population boomed up to 86,000 at the end of 1969 from 60,000 in 1960 and 30,000 in 1950.

The last annexation took place in 1950 and another expansion will soon be required. However, expansion this time will be of a much different type.

The city is presently equipping itself to cope with the social, governmental, and recreational complexities of a large, prosperous, vital city.

The notion of Oshawa as a small city where you could meet all your friends at the "four corners" is disappearing. It has been replaced by the sounds of the city, a growing sophisticated community with good services, a major hospital, large well-equipped schools using the latest teaching methods and aids, excellent sporting and recreational facilities. Even the quality of entertainment which is coming to Oshawa signifies that the city is coming of age.

BRIGHT FUTURE

This burgeoning city, with its large, trained work force, and prime industrial land, this growing community which combines the advantages of a city, yet still has not reached a size where the individual is entirely lost in the crowd, this city of ours faces a future bright with growth prospects.

To guide the anticipated growth and development, the city of Oshawa is participating in the Oshawa area planning and development study. This study — called OAPADS for short — is the first of its kind in North America.

It takes a total approach not only to Oshawa, but to Oshawa in the context of its surrounding environment. The study looks at the inter-relationship between Oshawa, Whitby, Bowmanville, Ajax, Pickering Village and the townships of Darlington, East Whitby and Pickering.

The first phase of the study is aimed at the creation of a regional government centred on Oshawa, in line with the provincial government's design for development program. This study, however, differs from the numerous local government reviews commissioned by the province. It came about as a result of local action to predict and plan for future transportation routes.

In 1967 Oshawa organized the traffic technical co-ordinating committee comprising city staff and elected people to create a long range street building program for the city. This group found that their efforts would be meaningless unless they also knew what the neighboring municipalities were planning as far as streets were concerned.

First Oshawa invited Whitby to participate in the study initially created by the late Ald. Dr. J. E. Rundle. Then all the members of the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board entered into the study and Whitby Mayor Desmond Newman became the chairman of the undertaking.

At the same time, rumors of the "inevitability of regional government" stimulated great interest, particularly in Oshawa and Whitby. In the spring of 1968, Oshawa hosted a regional government conference designed to acquaint all interested area representatives with the concept, advantages and disadvantages of regional government. Elected officials and staff from all across Ontario county, and the neighboring counties turned out to hear the collection of regional government experts, and agreed to meet again to discuss the subject. There followed a series of irregular meetings, chaired by Mayor Newman.

INCLUDE ALL

Meanwhile, the traffic technical co-ordinating committee was concluding that a transportation study could not be undertaken without reference to future land use, servicing plans, and the economic base of the area, or would a grandiose transportation scheme be of any use if it were too expensive for the municipalities to implement. This committee also concluded that for such a comprehensive scheme covering five municipalities to be implemented cohesively, there would have to be some kind of authority or group which would have the power to cross municipal boundaries.

These forces came together in the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study. While the proposal for the study was being assessed by the municipal officials and politicians and the provincial government, the area municipalities continued to meet and exchange ideas on the approach to regional government.

They found that no one consultant could do the job by himself so they hired a consortium of consultants each responsible for one aspect of the study: economic base, land use, municipal services, transportation, financing, regional government and implementation.

Representatives of several provincial departments became members of the technical committees of the study providing information about provincial plans. The province agreed to pay 100 percent of the cost of the close to $1 million dollar study, and 75 percent of the cost of the remainder. The balance will be paid by the municipalities which eventually become part of the new region.

A PROPOSAL

The study itself finally got underway mid-September, 1969, with Neil Irwin of Kates, Peat and Marwick as chairman of the consortium of consultants. Edward Simms was appointed executive director of the study to co-ordinate consultants, technical committees of the staffs of the various municipalities and the executive committee of elected representatives. Oshawa Mayor Bruce Mackey is vice-chairman of the study.

Because of the provincial emphasis in creating regional governments around Metropolitan Toronto as quickly as possible, the first task of the study is to produce a proposal for a regional government. Don Paterson, the consultant in charge of regional government and implementation, brought out the initial report on regional government late in January. This first discussion paper resulted from the preliminary studies of the consultants. The staff committees of the municipalities, and the executive committee of the study which comprises the elected representatives of the member municipalities.

It dealt with all the many, many combinations of possibilities for the boundaries of the eventual region. It also outlined all the desirable aims of each of the study components and showed where they sometimes came into conflict.

The consultants are planning in depth for a basic study area which consists of Pickering Township, Whitby, East Whitby, Oshawa, Darlington, Bowmanville, and Clarke Township. An extensive study area is also under consideration. This is primarily Ontario county but the study feels that all boundaries must be looked at to understand the total effect of any shifting of boundaries on both the municipalities to be included in the Oshawa-region and those which are excluded.

A second report which narrowed down the choices for a region was published in May and a final report which will probably contain several fully worked-up regional schemes is to be presented in a couple of weeks.

PUBLIC HEARINGS

Following this there will be two months of public hearings where all interested groups and individuals can comment on the proposals. Next Paterson will prepare his final report based on the comments and the studies which will then be submitted to the executive committee for approval.

The final draft will then be presented to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, D'Arcy McKeough. The municipalities themselves can't simply decide they want to form a regional government. Only the province can create municipalities and shift boundaries, and the province will have the final word when it comes to selecting boundaries for the Oshawa area, the division of powers, and even the name.

The members of the Oshawa-centred study feel that this study is the best way of ensuring that they will have the maximum influence in deciding their own future.

Naturally, studies in the other areas of land use, economics, transportation and public services are already underway and as that information is essential to the decisions being made on regional government.

30-YEAR PLAN

Once the consultants complete the regional government component, they will commence intensive work on the remaining components with a 30-year total development plan for the new region expected for completion shortly after the new council will take office in 1972, if all goes smoothly.

Although all the municipalities in the basic study area agreed the study was necessary, not all feel that they should be included in the proposed region. Pickering voters showed in a 1969 plebiscite that they overwhelmingly favored becoming part of Metro Toronto to being in an Oshawa-centred region. However, by far the majority of Pickering residents are emigres from Toronto who moved to the Bay Ridges area to find less expensive housing and the more amenable atmosphere of "country living".

The town of Ajax with a 10,000 population says it will go to which ever city can give it the best deal. The Town of Pickering, however, wants to maintain its historic ties to Oshawa and Ontario county, and this feeling is shared by many of the long term rural residents of the township.

Although Whitby Mayor Desmond Newman says that "Whitby least needs regional government," he was the first person in the area to make a public speech on the subject in January, 1968, and is now chairman of the executive committee of OAPADS, and possibly in line for the chairmanship of the region. Whitby is the county town and would like to remain the seat of the regional government.

Bowmanville enthusiastically declare that its future lies with Oshawa and Darlington townships has also opted for the Oshawa-centred region although this means separating from the United Counties of Northumberland-Durham.

Clarke Township to the east of Darlington has as yet made no public statement for or against joining the Oshawa region. Durham county people in general are concerned about losing Newcastle, the county seat, although it is in the westerly portion of the township which might most logically be included in the saw-off.

East Whitby Township was one of the original participants in the study and feels a natural association with the future of Oshawa and Whitby. In fact, neither East Whitby nor Darlington Townships can support extensive growth unless they are serviced through the Oshawa sewer and water systems.

FOUR REGIONS

There are perhaps four projected regions which find substantial support. People in the Basic Study area, south of the ridges, tend to see the Ridges as a natural northern limit, while those north of the Ridge feel that Ontario county should not be broken up. A small number of Oshawa people would prefer to see a much smaller area than even the basic study area — merely an enlarged Oshawa. Others are concerned by indications that the province will encourage a large rural hinterland to be attached to the urban economic base and suggest that the region take in the first tier of townships north of the Ridges. In any case, unless the entire county becomes the region, the study will have to provide a viable alternative for the area which is not included.

The eastern boundary at this stage appears the least contentious. Everyone would include Bowmanville and Darlington, some Cartwright, the township immediately north of Darlington, and some would locate the eastern boundary somewhere in the middle of Clarke township.

The western boundary is likely to cause the most strife. Pickering Township Reeve John Williams wants the whole township to join Metro, while the rest of the study group would prefer the

By the time this epistle gets into print I shall be back in Oshawa but there are a few scribbled notes about New York that I'm sending on while they are still fresh.

I can't get accustomed to the sight of women smoking cigars; not on the street but in dining rooms and lounges. Seems it's the "in" thing with the social set. The cigars are very long and pencil slim. Others are small like a king-size cigarette and are smoked in decorative, tapered holders.

It's not exactly a common sight but I saw enough to realize that it's a new trend.

The Scandinavian Mink Association invited the fashion editors to a couture fashion showing at a Scandinavian luncheon in the grand ballroom of the Plaza Hotel. The stage setting was a device of glittering blocks of ice. The mink was pure luxury and the menu was interesting: Swedish liver pate Norwegian veal in aspic, Finnish cucumber salad, cold asparagus tips Swedish, Danish cheese tray, Danish fruit pudding and Cherry Heering.

At the outset the host announced that there would be a draw for a mink coat. All through lunch I worried about the duty I would have to pay at the border. A woman from Florida won it.

The luxurious mink for the beautiful people was presented to the fashion press but, by a strange coincidence, the beautiful people attended a Fashion Safari, that same night, featuring gorgeous man-made furs.

This Fashion Safari "No Skin off Their Backs", was hosted by the World Wildlife Fund. Patrons and guests of honor included Mr. and Mrs. Francis (cornflakes) Kellogg; Mrs. Wyatt Cooper (Gloria Vanderbilt); Mrs. Ernest Hemingway; Hugh O'Brian; Commander Edward Whitehead (Mr. Schweppes); Mrs. Harry Belafonte; Mrs. Johnnie Carson; Princess Mary Obolensky.

United Nations sent representatives from Ethiopia, Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia.

"Who needs a tiger?" queried Roger Caras, well-known author and conservationist in his after-dinner address. "What does it matter if all the leopards wind up as coats and hats?" He warned his listeners that the number of "big cats" was diminishing so fast that soon there would be none.

His directness had a great impact on everyone. Nat Kaplan, designer and manufacturer, stood up and said he would no longer sell tiger skin coats.

For a nice effect, the guests arrived in Jaguars and were greeted by tom-toms and dancers from the Olatunji Centre for African culture.

J. P. Stevens and Co. invited us to a champagne luncheon with a delicate French menu and brought along Victor Borge and his piano. Victor helped (?) to introduce the models wearing high-styles in Stevens quality fabrics. It was a riot.

Last night some of us went to an off-Broadway play, "Colette" which was excellent. First we had a

"Kick the habit" warns Aileen Shier

Kick the habit — it's a matter of life and breath.

This is the slogan being used by the Ontario County Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association to urge smokers to stop smoking.

Aileen P. Shier, Chairman of Health Education, says,

"Basically, the role of health education is to help people achieve optimum health by their own actions and efforts. We consider education to be one of the major tasks of the TB-RD Association. We have endeavoured to make the public aware that emphysema, chronic bronchitis, asthma, tuberculosis and other respiratory diseases are all health hazards.

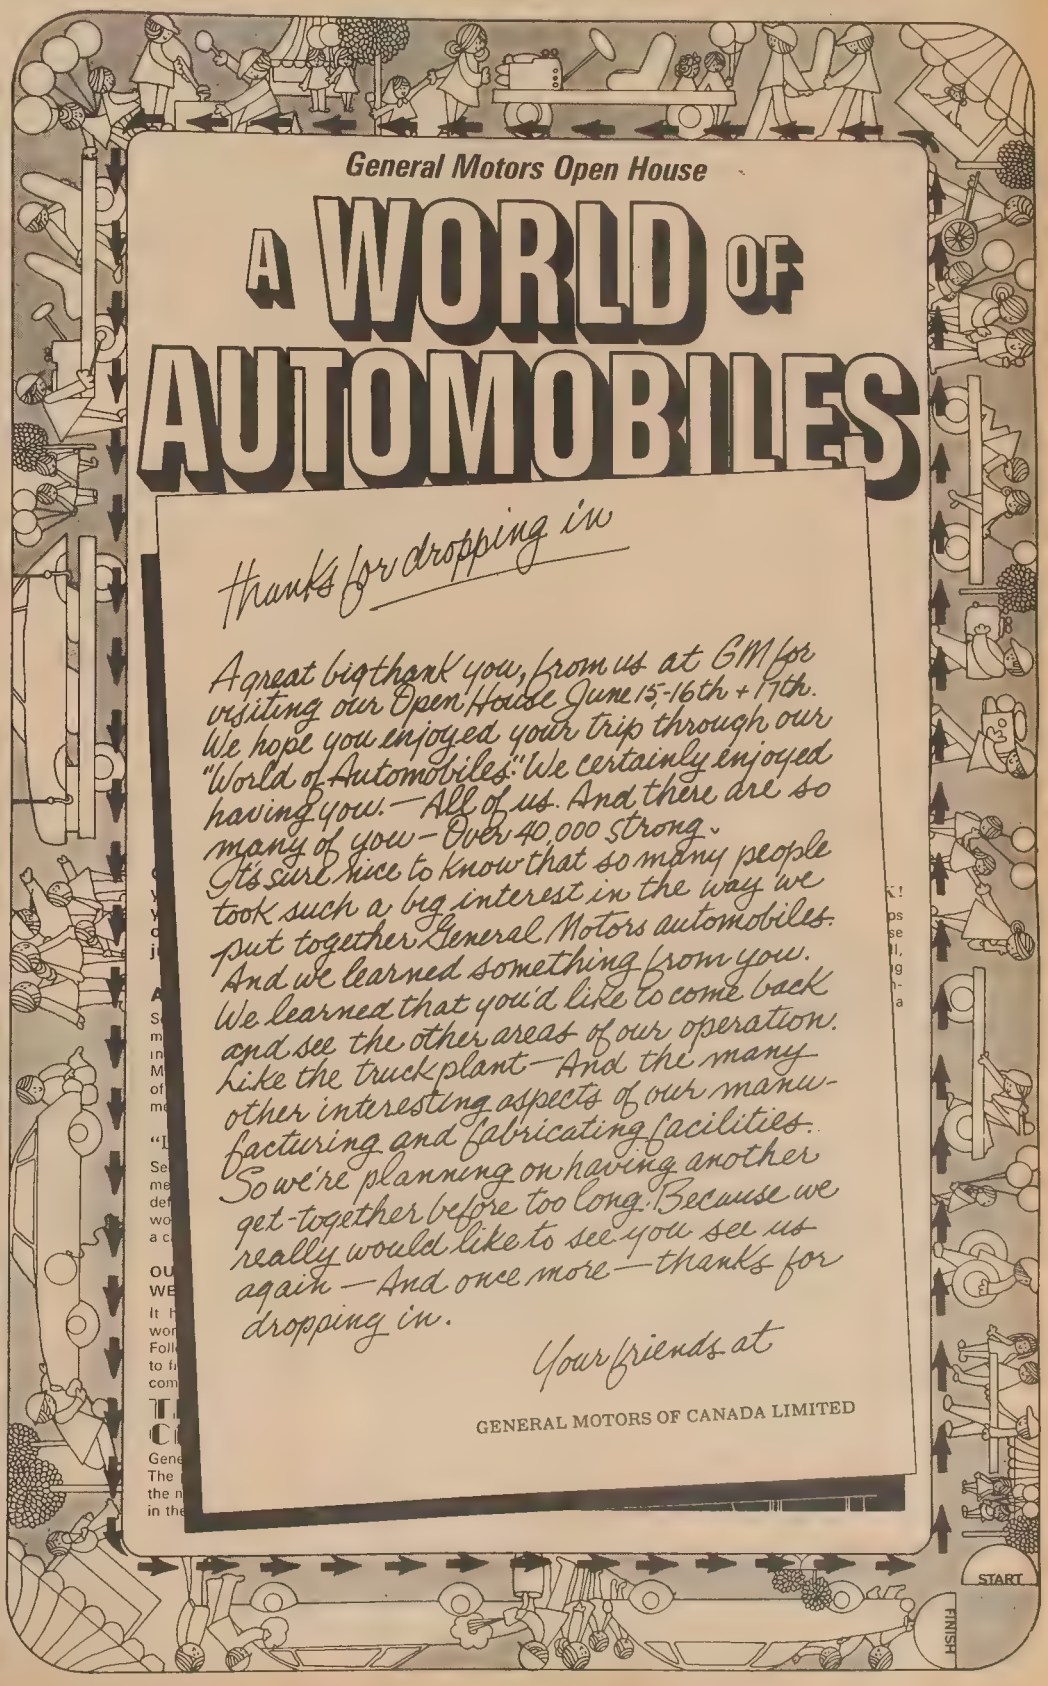
"This has been accomplished in various ways. Through the Public Health Nurses — we supply pamphlets — even for the registration of kindergarten pupils; in the X-Ray Clinic and Testing Centre, Midtown Mall, Oshawa; through doctor's offices; to schools, etc.

"Thousands of pieces of literature have been distributed throughout the city by TB-RD workers for the Multiphasic Testing Survey. A similar service is to be held in the county this coming fall.

"Health education messages are placed in practically all high school yearbooks, and students are reminded that a substantial bursary is available for post-graduate studies leading to a Masters Degree in Health Education.

"One of our films Life and Breath has been used ext4nsively by the Seventh Day Adventist Church during their 5 Day Smoking Plans as well as much of our literature. Again, many of our pamphlets were used in their booth at the three-day Home Show in Oshawa.

"We sponsored a Smoker's Dial where people who earnestly desired to stop smoking could dial a certain number and hear a pre-recorded message. The messages were changed every two or three days.



"Again, during the year, we co-sponsored Child Care Training Courses at the Oshawa YWCA, and the Whitby YMCA. We provided literature, record books and arranged for a registered nurse to tuberculin test all candidates — one of the requirements of the course.

"Christmas Seal Associations have been asked to join forces with the National and Provincial organizations in a "Kick The Habit" campaign against cigarette smoking in June. We have been asked to assist in a month-long campaign

It's only a few months 'til kindergarten

By TOM DOUGLAS

This may seem a little early to be discussing school next fall, but most Kindergarten teachers would disagree. Mothers can make their children's first year of school much easier if they spend the summer preparing them for it.

Several area Kindergarten teachers were contacted recently by This Week and offered a list of five "musts" that will make the child's first days at school easier on everyone involved.

1. The child should know his full name and address in case he gets lost. It would help if he also knew his telephone number

2. Make sure the child knows how to dress himself. Clothing should fit. Boots should be large enough to go on easily. Buttons should be large and easily handled.

3. The child should know his way to and from school as well as a few basic safety rules. Then, if he should become separated from the older child who usually takes him, he can get home on his own.

4. Foster the right attitude about school. Don't hold it up to the child as a threat. Make him understand that it is a privilege that comes as part of growing up.

5. The parent must show an interest in the child's work. Some of his efforts he brings home will be crude by adult standards but very important to him.

One teacher suggested that the child be taught to go directly home after school.

"The parent should insist on this to save a lot of anxious moments," she said. "If, however, the child does go to a classmate's home for any reason, that parent should telephone right away."

A second teacher stressed that parents should encourage their child to get involved with others rather than hang back on the sidelines.

"Get him interested in playing with his classmates and in taking part in school activities," she said. "Don't keep him wrapped in cellophane."

The child's health was listed as a prime item of concern by another Kindergarten teacher.

"Health is most important," she said. "Regular hours of sleep, good food, suitable clothing and a good attitude towards care of the body will go a long way to making a good pupil of the child."

Other suggestions from teachers included a veto on baby talk, encouragement towards the reading of books, the fostering of self-responsibility and the correct attitude towards discipline.

All of those contacted suggested that this article be printed as soon as possible so that the parents of next fall's Kindergarten pupils could clip it out and keep it handy over the summer so that the proper training can be undertaken.

Looking at the future entire township in the new region. However, the latter are willing to compromise and cede the southwestern densely populated corner of Pickering township in the Toronto metropolis.

INTERNAL STRUCTURE

Also to be determined is the internal structure of the region. Should there be one-tier of government or two with a regional council and local councils sharing the powers and responsibilities. While the one-tier government could be more efficient and cheaper, this has to be weighed against ease of communication between voters and representative. Public opinion favors the two-tier structure.

Regional government is a must for this area. The futures of Oshawa, Whitby, East-Whitby, Darlington, Bowmanville are so closely liked that there must be some formal arrangements between them if the area is to fulfill its natural growth potentials.

But we must also look at the larger question, that of preserving a new way of life which is desirable. Mayor Newman, the OAPADS chairman suggests that if the growth of Metropolitan Toronto is not contained within its present boundaries, our comfortable, more spacious way of life will be lost all together in one monstrous megalopolis.

Persecution charged by food mart chief

Mottle Goodbaum, general manager of Sunnybrook Food Markets says the chain's Oshawa store will stay open on Sunday despite a conviction last week under the Lord's Day Act and a $250 fine.

Goodbaum said the possibility of an appeal by his firm will depend on when the Ontario Law Reforms Commission is expected to hand down its recommendations on Sunday openings.

"If the commission is slow to decide, we may appeal," he said, "to keep the issue alive."

Goodbaum feels his firm is being persecuted and singled out "to be the scapegoat."

CAMAS WEEKEND

Over 500 Rovers and Rangers from across Ontario pitched their tents at Cam Samac for the weekend's 10th annual Camas. Events included canoe races and greased pole climbing, a dance at Eastdale Collegiate and a midnight swim in the Camp Samac Pool. The get-together ended with an interdenominational church service.

look at the Bowery. Driving down Third Avenue, I caught the names of some of the hostelries: The Goose and Gherkin; Donald's Duck-In; The Jolly Sixpence; The Naked Grape and an antique shop called Age and Reason.

At the Ellen Stewart Theatre on Third Street we saw Zoe Caldwell and Mildred Dunnock starring in this intensely human play, full of comedy and tragedy. Zoe Caldwell, the Australian actress who received great praise at our Stratford, is perfectly cast as Colette, the French writer and actress from whose autobiography, "Earthly Paradise", the play is constructed.

We were advised that a special bus would be waiting to take patrons up-town after the show. The Bowery is not the safest place to be on the street late at night.

The theatre is a bare, brick-barn of a place. My companion thought she heard bats squeaking. Yet the play is drawing crowds, which proves something.

Too tired to start packing tonight. Home tomorrow.

Chaleur school up in air

The Ontario County Board of Education is expected to decide July 13 on the building of a new secondary school at Chaleur Ave. and Cedar Street in south Oshawa.

Plans for the 1,500 student school went up in the air last week in connection with a bid by the Board to expropriate 17 acres of land near the site.

Lawyer David Vine, enquiry officer at the expropriation hearing, says in his report the proposed location of the high school is a good one, but that he would like the Board to check further into problems of pumping sewage from the school.

Ten commandments for a "good press"

By TOM DOUGLAS

Bouquets to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for giving its members some advice that will benefit them and make the job of we journalistic types a lot easier

The chamber, in a booklet made available to its 850 member organizations across the country, suggests 10 commandments for obtaining publicity.

For anyone reading this who deals with the press at any time, please clip this article and keep it handy. It will guarantee your organization a much better chance of having its story told to the public.

The chamber's 10 commandments for publicity read as follows:

1. Be fair and honest. If you make a statement, stick to it. If you have a news release, be sure that all interested papers and radio stations receive it. If, however, a reporter gets an idea for a story and contacts you, don't give the idea away to some other publication.

2. Be accurate. Never guess about a name or a number. Get initials straight and check the spelling of names. For example, if a newspaper photographer attends a meeting of the group, you should have someone on hand to help round up the appropriate people for pictures and to identify them with correct initials and offices held.

3. Be speedy. Many people do not seem to realize that news is often a matter of minutes. The same individual who would be surprised to find a month-old item in his newspaper will submit just as ancient a story to the editor and expect him to print it.

4. Think in terms of the medium. A paper obviously cannot carry a 35-page report of an annual meeting but will certainly carry a shortened version of the report.

5. Be friendly but not patronizing.

6. Learn about newspaper and radio business but don't try to be an editor. If a reporter submits a story to you to look over from the point of view of accuracy, never suggest a change in English (unless it's in a direct quote from you) or any sort of editorial change and do not insist on seeing a reporter's story before it appears; this is usually resented.

7. Do not try to use contacts on the business or advertising side of the paper to secure the publication of news or editorial material.

8. Always double-space news releases and texts of speeches and be sure there are enough copies to go around.

9. Supply the local paper with up-to-date pictures, and biographical material on your officers and have extra copies on file in case they are asked for.

10. Put your editor and radio station manager on the mailing list to receive your bulletins and notices.

The Man In The Panama Hat

ELIZABETH KIMBALL

One of the more graphic lines about Stephen Leacock in The Man in the Panama Hat describes him as looking "like a bundle of clothing ready for the St. Vincent de Paul drop-box for the poor."

The Man in the Panama Hat is completely unlike anything else that has been written about Leacock. Recalling her childhood when she shared her uncle's crowded and colourful world, Elizabeth Kimball describes him not as the famour humourist, Stephen Leacock, but as "Uncle Stephen," who was only one of her many remarkable uncles — his mother never considered him her most remarkable son, "I have six sons," she once said coldly to a gushing visitor, "and all of them are remarkable."

With great charm and wit, Mrs. Kimball recreates the marvellous atmosphere of Leacockland so you can practically feel the texture of the rug in her grandmother's parlour, and inhale the giddy compound of whiskey, outdoors, tobacco and tweed, "of which," she says, "all the men in my family smelled, including Uncle Stephen." Of his retreat at Old Brewery Bay, as a child she remembers, "torture rack beds, punch-hole window screens and taps from which no water ran . . . " She also reminisces about the invitations she and her other cousins received to visit him, "Invitations were in the form of summons — He sent for us".

In this personal and honest memoir, Mrs. Kimball strips away the layers of false adulation and hypocritical whitewashing which have surrounded her uncle's legend. Stephen Leacock, the man behind the legend is presented in this charming, intimate portrait. Here is Leacock in a new perspective — as a member of a large and vivacious family which regarded him with much affection, great honesty, and no awe whatsoever. "If only they knew how much he drank, they wouldn't make such a fuss of him." one of his sisters said irritably after a particularly trying session with some Leacock worshippers.

Elizabeth Kimball was born into the Leacock clan at Haileybury, Ontario; she received her education in Belleville and graduated from the University of Toronto. Her work as a travel writer has taken her around the world and she has contributed to major Canadian magazines.

after hours

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

Tonight is "D" day or should that read "B" for Brouwer day. The editor of "This Week", Peter Brouwer is having his debut on the magic tube in a series of shows with the political scene in the telecast area. Now everyone in the Hustings knows that an editor is up on his politics so you can expect the fireworks to commence this Wednesday at 6:30 because rumor has it that the sports car driving mayor of good old Oshawa will be on to expound his philosphies on the running of a city, plus all the extra curricular activities that embrace the job of being the number one man in the Rundle tower.

If the rain holds off and the Dominion Day parade is held then the remote cameras of the Cablecast 8 crew will be out to immortalize the event for showing after the regular scheduled programming is concluded. Having worked on several of these events myself I know the aggravation of organizing this parade. Since the crew will be working all Dominion Day, Friday will be the day off so there will be no broadcasting for the second last day of the week.

No matter how hard you try to spread the work out to an even keel, one day always seems to grab it all. Wednesday is that day with a parade — if the rain stays away — the new show, and a lacrosse game all bunched together to give the viewer about seven hours of programming for the day.

The past week gets the Sabyan fur lined potty for disaster after disaster in the land of the magic tube. The classic one happened in Petawawa when a brand new portable camera packed up while in the bush without giving any signs of doing so. The second little klinker was the automatic record release on one of the expensive recorders stayed on and wiped out part of the lacrosse game. If this boggles the imagination with ineptitude think back to the first year the CBC was on, that year would get a gold plated fur lined potty for disaster.

If you notice that the month of July looks light from the number of hours, you're absolutely right. Most of the regulars are taking a holiday in preparation for a busy fall schedule which will include several specials including a water powered mill over 100 years old to a marsh that's being replaced.

Open-ended concept paying off at Vanier School

Innovation is more than just a word at the new General Vanier Secondary School on Gibb Street. On June 25 the school held its Second Commencement Exercises within a period of one school year. The switch in programs from November to June came in response to requests by students and teachers who envisaged greater participation by students while they were still in regular school attendance.

The switch paid off Thursday when a capacity audience filled the auditorium for the evening's program conducted by Phil Smith, Vice-Principal.

Innovation was the theme for the evening, Principal Piekarz was able to expand on this topic and stressed his continuing pride in the young school. Thus, the Work Experience program which enabled students to move out into local industrial and commercial establishments was a real success. As a result of this program 60% of the Food School graduates would find employment in their chosen field. "The all-round results of this program have been encouraging", Piekarz said later. "Our liaison with outside agencies took a big step forward this year. The students and the community are the real winners when we are able to do this kind of job", he added.

General Vanier was able also, to forge new links with the public schools and with the handicapped classes in the city. These students were able to utilize school facilities such as the swimming pool — on a scheduled basis. "When you see the Vanier staff taking time out of their regular day's program to assist students from other schools you realize what the term 'dedication' means," he said.

The increasing trend to community use of schools can also be seen in the summer and winter programs conducted at the school by the Community Recreation Association and by the Ontario County Board's adult evening classes.

Principal C. K. Piekarz with outstanding students Stephanie Naylor and Bill Smart.

If there are innovations then who are the innovators? Piekarz explained that the administration, teaching staff and students were all involved in planning new programs. A complete Activity Day Program was only made possible this year by a student-teacher organization. A week-long Conservation School for boys was organized and implemented by Mr. McCoy, Academic Director.

Staff harmony seems to be a big factor in getting new programs under way, in assessing their value to the students and in preparing modified programs for the future. The school this year has to replace six teachers in a staff of fifty-seven. The school's program can proceed on a much firmer base with such a small staff turn-over.

The school program however needs the endorsement of the Ontario County Board of Education and Piekarz seemed more than pleased with the support he had received from the Director, his Superintendents, Board of Education Trustees and the Advisory Vocational Committee.

Stan Lovell, chairman of the Board, brought greetings to the students, parents and teachers at the school, on Thursday last. Only a year previously Lovell conducted the school's opening ceremonies and was now in a position to review the progress of the past year.

Thursday evening the students were rewarded for their endeavours in the academic and technical fields. A wide range of prizes, diplomas and awards were presented by the staff and local donors. Colonel Sam McLaughlin headed the list of awards for outstanding achievement.

As visitors entered the school they were presented with a colorful program prepared by students in the Printing and Duplicating Department. Before the visitors left the building they were rewarded with a selection of delicacies prepared by the Food Department. The program seemed to have a suitable beginning and ending. But Piekarz had the last work on this subject. "There is no ending", he said. "Students who demonstrate the ability and the desire can proceed to Grade 11 in the programs of the other city Secondary Schools. We have an open-ended concept here."

Report from Ottawa

'PM has turned his back on urban Canada'

Prime Minister Trudeau has turned his back on urban Canada, says Edward Broadbent, MP Oshawa-Whitby. Mr. Broadbent made the observation in a recent speech in the House of Commons. This article represents a summary of your MP's comments.

By Edward Broadbent

The present Liberal government presents a curious political paradox: we have elected the most urbane Prime Minister in our history, yet he has done nothing to suggest he recognizes or cares about our urban society. As in every other area of policy, our erudite and reflective Prime Minister has stood apart in bemused Olympian aloofness while a transformed nation drifts aimlessly towards a major urban crisis. Nothing stirs him to action — he has completely failed to lead. He has turned his back on the urbanized Canadians who elected him.

Canada is no longer a rural nation which happens to include a few cities. It is an urban society in which the vast majority of our people live in a dozen cities and in which all members, wherever they live, live an urban life.

Not only do most of our people live in cities — but even those remaining in the country are no longer rural in their outlook. Mini skirts, television news flashes from around the world, station wagons, Judy Collins and Beatles records — all these and more are experienced by town and country dwellers alike. The distinction between city slicker and country bumpkin is passe. Rural Canadian culture is part of history.

CRISIS OF THE CITY

But it remains true that the urban crisis is essentially the crisis of our cities. Most of the problems we face as a nation are primarily experienced by those living in our cities: air and noise pollution, congested and high-cost housing, expressways destroying neighbourhoods, lack of parks, the inaccessibility to the arts for the average man, the destitution of men and women living on inadequate old age pensions, the soul-destroying existence of thousands of unemployed, the grim poverty of families of non-unionized workers living on subsistence wages.

Already 75% of our people live in cities. By 1980 the figure will be 80%. And by the turn of the century, only 5% will remain in the country.

The financial resources of our cities are completely inadequate to deal with these problems on their own. Every mayor from St. Johns to Vancouver has pointed out that the property tax simply cannot provide the revenue which is required to meet the cities' responsibilities.

True, provincial governments must be criticized for not providing financial and planning assistance needed by the cities. However, the federal government must be condemned for its failure to live up to its constitutional responsibilities and provide leadership for what is now a national concern.

The Prime Minister callously told the cities they must take their problems to the provincial premiers, where he asserted they constitutionally belong. He scrapped future urban renewal plans, in the process, of course, acknowledging a once important federal involvement.

The specific areas of direct federal constitutional responsibility are:

1. Communications: TV, radio, telephone.
2. Central Mortgage and Housing.
3. Transportation: air services, harbours, railways, interprovincial roads.
4. Postal services.
5. Pollution.
6. The arts.
7. National parks.

Each provides access for any federal government concerned about the well-being of our city dwellers. Instead of seeing them as opportunities to create an exciting, decent and democratic human environment, the Prime Minister has completely abandoned federal responsibility. Contrary to his public image, Trudeau is not a man of action at all. He is evasive, cautious and conservative — he passes on his responsibilities to others.

Besides these specific federal responsibilities, there are other federal obligations which directly affect the lives of those in our cities, but which are not normally seen in the specific context of city life.

CONGESTION

It is the federal government which has brought in thousands of immigrants but has left the cities to cope with the problems of the consequent congestion. It is the federal government which provides a poverty-level pension to our elderly. It is the federal government which imposes a deflationary program designed to create urban unemployment. It is the federal government which spends millions of dollars building and subsidizing an arts centre in Ottawa at prices that only the rich can afford. It is the federal government which presents a White Paper on Taxation which would reduce income taxes on those earning more than $50,000 — but would still tax those living at the poverty level in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver. It is this federal government which refuses to bring a guaranteed minimum income which could make life more meaningful for those living in the hearts of our cities. It is this federal government's tight money policy which forces our mayors to curtail needed municipal services.

Finally, it is this federal government under Prime Minister Trudeau which refuses to provide leadership for an urban Canada.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I propose:

1. That the Prime Minister must begin to show an interest in what happens in Canada.

2. The creation of the Department of Urban Affairs whose prime purpose would be to deal with the prospects and problems of our cities — also serving as a stimulant in the much broader field of urbanism in general.

3. The granting to cities of the right to tax all provincial and federal properties.

4. The holding of a federal-provincial and municipal conference to which all participants would come as equals.

Such a conference should give serious consideration to two other possibilities: First, the taking over by the provincial governments of all education and welfare costs currently being assumed by the cities. And second, the possibility of establishing in Canada a number of regional governments based on a minimum population of approximately 100,000 and giving to these regional governments the right to levy their own income tax. Only by giving greater control over their own fate to the metropolitan regions can we enable them to create the civilized communities we all desire.

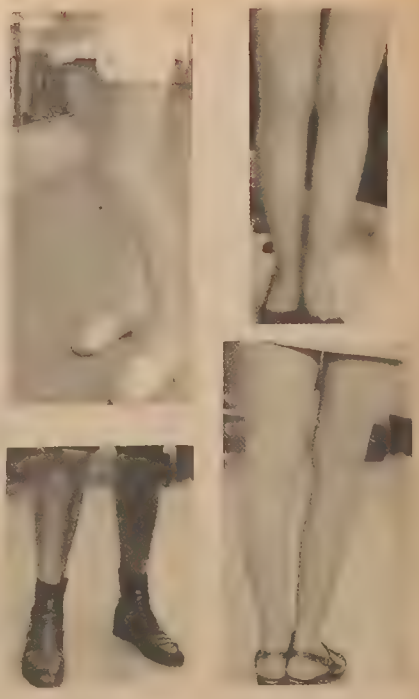
Legs have had it?

This may be the end of legs for another fashion season.

For many years, since the birth of man, the leg has been experiencing upheaval and downfalls. Throughout the passage of time the leg has not been allowed firm establishment in the male grasp. For it is the male who desires the fullest development of the leg today.

Unfortunately, fashion has closed its eyes to the pleas of limber experts and has focused them upon tastes of higher levels.



The fly in the ointment being, that although the leg was not always attractive it was normally a definite asset of unquestionable attributes. However, fickle fashion has changed the atmosphere to one of uncertainty and unreliability.

People of today are becoming discouraged with the hypocrisy of the fashion world. "What is real anymore?" they say.

Reality, uncertainty, unreliability — the new fashion concept hasn't got a leg to stand on, according to the leg lovers.

Today, according to fashion experts, the leg has been cast asunder. Hidden under maxi and midi dresses with low cut decolletages, the leg is being trodden on by the bust.

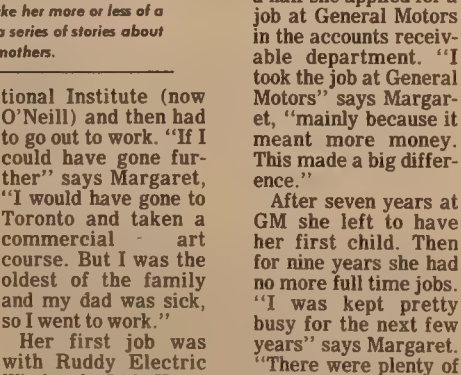
Working wives

Her boss is "the easiest going guy alive"

What's it like for a wife who works outside of the home? Is her home life neglected? Do the husband and children mind? Does it make her more or less of a woman? This is the fourth in a series of stories about Oshawa's working wives and mothers.

By Francine Fortier

Mrs. Margaret Conway says her boss "is the easiest going guy alive. He's soft as butter, so I can get around him. . . ."



This could have something to do with the fact that Margaret's boss is also her husband. David C. Conway is a general accountant who has been operating his own business for a year. Margaret has been with him every step of the way.

And they couldn't be happier. David finds putting his wife to good use in the office is much more economical than hiring someone and Margaret says she loves the feeling of "being needed."

The Conways have been married for 13 years and have three children — Margaret, 10, Steven, nine and Laurie, eight.

Margaret was born in Oshawa and went to Mary Street and Centre Street (now E. A. Lovell) elementary schools. She completed a second form business course at Oshawa Collegiate and Vocational Institute (now O'Neill) and then had to go out to work. "If I could have gone further" says Margaret, "I would have gone to Toronto and taken a commercial art course. But I was the oldest of the family and my dad was sick, so I went to work."

Her first job was with Ruddy Electric Wholesale Ltd. Here, she performed general office duties. While she worked she took evening courses in shorthand but found that she really didn't need it.

After she worked at Ruddy's for a year and a half she applied for a job at General Motors in the accounts receivable department. "I took the job at General Motors" says Margaret, "mainly because it meant more money. This made a big difference."

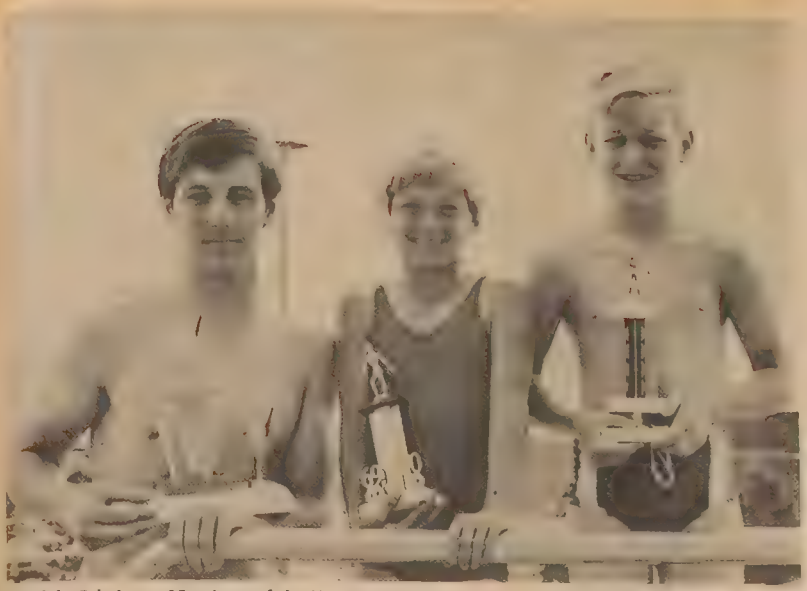
After seven years at GM she left to have her first child. Then for nine years she had no more full time jobs. "I was kept pretty busy for the next few years" says Margaret. "There were plenty of things to do at home. It didn't bother me not working. I didn't want to go to work and leave the kids, but I found when they started getting a little bit older and didn't need to depend on me so much, I felt that I would like to use the office experience I had."

For five of the nine years Margaret sold "Tupperware" part-time. "I did this" says Margaret, "to get me out of the house and give me something to do — it got me meeting people."

Last January she filled in for a secretary at an office for nine weeks. "Then the big day came" says Margaret. "Up until this point my husband had been working for an accounting firm but now he opened up his own business. And instead of hiring someone else as a secretary, he took me on to help him out and save a lot of time. He didn't have to ask me — it was just more or less an understanding that I would work for him when he went into business on his own."

To help out Margaret does the typing, balancing of books and various other clerical duties. "I don't plan on doing this forever" says Margaret. "But as long as I'm needed I'll stay here — it's kind of nice to feel needed.

"If the work is here I do it. And if it isn't I stay at home."



Margaret normally works every day from 9 a.m. until 3:45 p.m. This gives her plenty of time to act as wife and mother and arrange her schedule around her family.

"The children don't really miss me when I'm at work" says Margaret. "This is because I'm home about the same time they get home from school. And then I'm there to make everyone lunch at noon hour. With the children, my husband knows their needs as well as I do, so it works out quite well that way. And now that the holidays are here and the kids are at ome, he'll bring the work home to me."

What about the housework? "The housework gets done in bits and pieces" says Margaret. "It's usually done at night — a bit before supper and a bit after. The kids look after their own rooms, so it's not too much.

"I always get home in time to make a big supper. That's why I don't think anyone is really suffering. If I had to work from 9 until 5 every day, I think we would feel it — but this way we don't.

Four girls win 13 twirling awards

Four Oshawa girls captured 12 awards at the Eastern Ontario Baton Twirling Championships held in Ottawa over the weekend.

The girls competed with approximately 300 twirlers from across Ontario and the U.S.A.

Lee Ann Roberts, 9, captured 2nd place in the championship class and was pronounced runner-up to the Miss Eastern Ontario Juvenile Princess. Her performance was judged on a combination of strutting and solo twirling. Miss Roberts also placed 2nd in her solo division and 3rd in the Basic Strut.

The girls have been students of Mrs. Diana Hutton for the past nine months.

Another student of Mrs. Hutton's, Lee Campbell, 9, attended a baton competition in Waterloo on Saturday and captured 3rd place awards in both solo and military strut competition.

BASSETT TROPHY

The George Twiddy and Dorothy Haley entry won the Bassett Trophy in the mixed doubles tournament at the Oshawa Lawn Bowling Club. They had a score of 54 plus one for three wins. There were 32 teams taking part in the tournament.

SCUGOGS WIN

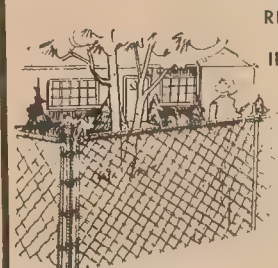
Scugog Cleaners brought Nurse Motors to their first defeat of the season, Thursday, in the UAW Softball League schedule at Alexandra Park. Scugog won 4-3.

Al Denault pitched the win for Scugog. He had one bad inning, the second, when Lyle Nelson took a single, Harry Wight a double, Frank Mako a single, while with one out Jim Carmichael drew a walk and Paul Edmondson followed with the fourth hit of the inning, scoring Mako with the third run of the rally.

Golfing lawyer winner

A golfing lawyer, Katherine Cartwright of the Cataraqui Golf and Country Club won top honors last week in the first flight of the Oshawa Golf Club's annual women's invitational tournament.

With a 79, Mrs. Cartwright captured the Lasco Steel Trophy for the low gross score of the entire field.



Mrs. Dave Henry with a 90 was the best Oshawa player. Other Oshawa winners were Pam MacKay, Sharon Clifford, Marg Jacobi, Donna Dobson, Lois Smyth, Betty MacDonald, Margaret Plewman.

The tournament was the second test match to determine the qualifiers to represent Peterborough and District Clubs at the Ontario Women's Amateur Tournament at Windsor, July 21.

Sue Kessler of Oshawa won the Peterborough and District Tournament at Port Hope last week. She heads the qualifiers along with Charlotte Empringham of Cedarhurst Club.

CINDY WINS

Cindy Robinson, 8, of Oshawa, at the Open National and International Strut and Twirl Championships held at Waterloo, Saturday, placed 1st. in Novice Military March. This win places her in Advanced Military. She is a student of the Harvey Dance Academy under the direction of Miss I. Harvey and a member of the "Tartan Blues", the Juvenile Corps of the "Tartan Twirlers" who will join other local and district majorettes in the city's annual July 1st. Parade.

Whitby boy, 10, jumps into grade 6

The day before his 11th birthday, Bill Dugan of 306 John Street West, Whitby, jumped away with a chestful of 'Tabs' in the school field day.

A student at E. A. Fairman Public School, Whitby, Bill came first in the running broad jump; first in the triple, and first in the high jump. He also got a first for having the most points in the athletic events (25 points) and, he came second in the shot-put, second in the mile, and a close third in the hundred yard dash.

These awards served to round off an eventful sports year for young Dugan, as he adds these credits to his other sports trophies for both individual and team events.

Bill plays hockey through the winter, and soccer in the summer. One of his trophies is for the "Most valuable player" in the Mosquito league.

The proud father, Jim Duggan, is coach to the Whitby Glass and Mirror Soccer Team on which Bill plays centre half. In this picture of Bill and his trophies and tabs, one thing is missing . . . his school report.

Bill's father says in addition to being a good all round athlete, his son is also an excellent student.

Brian Burk, grade two at E. A. Lovell was so happy shcool's out, he did his "flying in the sky" trick.

40 YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Duivesteyn, 406 Perry Street, Whitby, celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary, Friday. Married in Holland, the couple immigrated to Canada 19 years ago. They have lived in Whitby for six years. There are 11 children and 37 grand children.

HONOR TEACHER

Mrs. John Frost, Whitby teacher, was guest of honor at a dinner of 80 teachers and friends on the occasion of her retirement as a teacher. Mrs. Bess Duff presented a gift of luggage. Mayor Desmond Newman sent roses and best wishes.

BEETHOVEN

Five Oshawa musicians presented an all-Beethoven concert Monday at McLaughlin Public Library. Participating were pianists Stephen Fiess, Elizabeth Lambert, Henry Vanderkooi, Edward Philip Oscapella and violinist Ed Oscapella.

ROBERTS RUNS

George Roberts of Oshawa has announced he will run for election as Ontario Director to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Roberts is a former director of the Oshawa unit.

"Any spare time I make for myself. If I don't feel like doing the housework because there's something I want to do, I'll leave it and do it the next morning."

Are there any benefits when a wife works for her husband?

"We get along very well" says Margaret. "I wouldn't say it's a good thing for all bands and wives to work together. But Dave and I get along very well we always have.

"I get a great deal of satisfaction knowing that I'm doing something constructive.

"We're working for the same thing. He's working for us and I'm helping him out so he can keep us."

Tony's in close race for Canadian championship

Late Sunday night, Oshawa Tony's, who put up a real team effort saw their hopes of entering the Canadian Senior Softball Championships in Winnipeg, defeated by London's Dick Haynes.

In the all-weekend tournament for Ontario Seniors, Oshawa Tony's made a top-notch showing though.

The 13 participating teams were Windsor, Galt, London, Richmond Hill, Burlington, Cardinal, Toronto, Oshawa Gaels, Newmarket, Jarvis, Niagara Falls, Welland and Oshawa Tony's. All games played were seven innings.

GAME 1

The first game was scheduled for Friday evening but was called off because of rain, which made for a tight schedule on Saturday and Sunday.

Burlington was Tony's first opposition, Saturday. Burlington scored three runs, nine hits with no errors, and Tony's came up with four runs, eight hits and no errors.

Pete Landers was the winning pitcher in relief as he took over from Robbie Mason in the fifth inning. Mason struck out three batters, while Landers claimed eight victims. The star at bat for Tony's was Rich March, who had four hits in as many times at bat. With Tony's losing 3-2 in the bottom of the seventh and two out, Jack Sneddon walked and Rich March drive him home with a double, to tie the game 3-3. Bob Burke, next batter, hit the first pitch for a single, bringing March home with the winning run.

Oshawa Gaels beat Newmarket 10-0 to advance to second round against Tony's. The loser of this game was eliminated from the tournament.

Tony's scored three runs, eight hits, and one error. Gaels had zero runs, zero hits, and two errors. Pete Landers threw a no hitter against his Oshawa rivals, the only Gaels player, Bob Young, reaching first base by an error.

Losing pitcher was Larry Marshall who was replaced by Ron Taylor in the second. Rich March was again the man with the big hits as he singled in the first inning and scored on a sacrifice fly by Phil Solomon for the margin that Tony's needed.

Another must game was against Windsor, the loser again being eliminated from further play.

Windsor scored one run, two hits and three errors, while Tony's had two runs, seven hits and one error.

Losing pitcher was Gary Nolan who struck out eight. Pete Lander pitched in his third game of the day and beat one of the best teams in the tournament as he threw a two-hitter and struck out 13.

Phil Solomon and Jack Snedded supplied the power at bat to get the winning margin. The entire team was up for this game although it was their third game of the day.

GAME 4

London was the next opponent, the winner of this game advanced to the finals. The loser had to play Burlington, the winner of the loser's bracket.

London scored four runs, eight hits, zero errors, and Tony's — one run, seven hits, one error.

Winning pitcher Dick Haynes allowed seven hits but kept them well scattered. Jack Snedden got Oshawa's only run when he poled a home run in the fifth inning. Dale Godding led London at bat with a triple and single.

Pete Landers took the loss, Robbie Mason coming on in relief in the fourth inning.

Chronicles of Osh

1. And as the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy was nigh at hand, there was a stir in the land of Osh and it stirred many of the Oshites and the people of other lands were casting their eye upon the land of Osh, saying, behold, what gives with these people.

2. For Terence of Osh, a mighty defender of the innocent and the guilty had arisen, and he had travelled to various other lands telling of all the great things of Osh and the Oshites. Now Terence, though not an elder of the land of Osh was one who had been anointed by the elders of Osh to bring about great things for the land of Osh, in that he had been chosen to bring unto the land of Osh the great games of summer that drew the runners and the jumpers, and all those who put shot and batted balls, and many more, the best in each from the far regions of Can.

3. And the things that Terence had to come to pass thus far in the land of Osh were truly magnificent. For he had prevailed upon the elders of the land of Osh to put up a whole donkeyed effort, instead of a half one, and as the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy was nigh at hand, it appeared unto the Chronicler of Osh as if Terence was going to be blessed in his task of bringing unto the land of Osh the games of summer.

4. And not only were the games going to bring the merchants of the land of Osh much prosperity, but also the Oshites and the people of Whit and the Bowmans and the Pickets and all those that were afar off would receive tenfold blessings from the efforts of Terence of Osh and his henchmen.

5. And it was thus that the elders of Osh and the people of the land awaited with great expectations the things that were to come to pass.

6. Now elsewhere in the land of Osh, especially in the camps of those who were called the Endeepees there was much holding of breath also, as Broad of Bent was flexing his muscles in the great race for the mighty seat of Thomas of Can, leader of all the Endeepees, who had made it clear to the people of the land of Can, and in particular to the Endeepees that he would lay to rest the scepter with which he had ruled the Endeepees throughout the reigns of Big Chief Johann Diefenbunker and Les Pierceall, yea also through the reign sofar of Big Chief Waterhole.

7. Now there were many who felt Broad of Bent who spoke for the people of Osh and the Whitites in the Chamber of Can and before the throne of Mighty Chief Waterhole, well, that Broad had a mighty good chance to take the scepter from the hand of Thomas of Can. But there were some who said, behold, he has not the prayers and the support of all those who labor and are organized. (Now being a laborer and organized in those days meant that one would at regular intervals in one's career pick up ones placard and walk up and down the gates of the shop in which one work, waving the placard, and refusing to do one's labor, until one's bossman would give into one's pressure, so to speak.)

8. And Broad of Bent, ever since the day he replaced Michael the Star in the Chamber of Can, had been a man who did not mince words in the Chamber of Can, nor in other places and he had reaped words of praise as well as scolding from many of the leaders of the land of Can. In particular had this man of Osh been taken to task by the Pharoah of Whit who had colored him red at one point. But these things had long since become a thing of the past both in the land of Osh, yea even among the Whitites.

9. But there were among the Whitites and also in the land of Osh those who feared for the strength of Broad of Bent in his own land, once he was off and running to take over the scepter from Thomas of Can.

10. And while some of these things were foremost in the minds of the people of Osh and the Whitites, there were murmerings from the land of Tor, yea from the Holy Mountain of Qupee, from which the High and Mighty John ruled all the lands of the region of Ont, and it came to pass that the scrolls of Tor. were hinting at the stepping down from his throne of the H and M John. And many held their breaths, saying, he wouldn't.

11. And the H and M John hinted that he had been seated upon the throne in the Holy Mountain of Qupee for quite some time, and that his seat had grown weary, so to speak. And some of these things were put forth by the H and M when Donald of the Endeepees in Ont told his henchmen that he was packing it in for sure, to make room for a man of younger years and new in vision to lead the Endeepees to victory in the regions of Ont, casting asunder the H and M John's rule and that of his henchmen, which appeared doubtful, even with Mort the Sicilian at the helm, for to many in the regions of Ont, the H and M John was like unto a combination of Moses and Aaron, even though he had not led his people across or through any seas.

faced off for the second time in the tournament, the winner advancing to the finals to play London.

Burlington had zero runs, three hits, zero errors and Tony's — two runs, four hits, two errors.

Pete Landers threw a t ree hitter striking out five for the victory. Losing pitcher Jack Paquette allowed only four hits but one was a home run by Billy Taylor with Gord Wilson on base.

GAME 6

London was undefeated. Tony's had one defeat. Tony's must beat London twice to win the championship.

London had zero runs, zero hits, zero errors and Tony's — four runs, eight hits, one error.

Landers came through with a no hitter and struck out 14 batters. Only one London player reached first base.

Tony's struck early as Jack Sneddon hit the first pitch of the game over the left field fence. In the third inning he hit another HR over the right field fence. Sneddon went three for three in the game as he hit a double in the fifth inning to deep dentre.

The final game of the tournament was the fourth game of the day for Tony's, who scored one run, five hits, zero errors, while London had sociated with the Ontario Regiment, having joined as a Second-Lieutenant in 1940. In his appointment as Honourary Leiutenant-Colonel, he will assist the Regiment's Honourary Colonel, Herbert J. Cook, in a wide range of regimental ctivites.

In commenting on Colonel Millen's appointment, the Regiment's Commanding Officer, Leieutenant-Colonel Nicholas M. Hall said "We are delighted that Colonel Millen has been selected to be our Honourary Lieutenant-Colonel. He has a distinguished war record with the Ontarios, is a prominent Oshawa businessman and has been a faithful friend to the Regiment since the war years."

Lieutenant-Colonel Millen will be officially "dined in" to his position with the Ontario Regiment at a special dinner to be held to mark the Regiment's 104th birthday on September 11, 1970.

Lieutenant-Colonel Millen was born in Thamesville, Ontario on January 23, 1913. He received his education in that centre and later received a Commerical Teacher's certificate for the Province of Ontario.

Colonel Millen's military background started with the outbreak of World War II, when he was commissioned in the 2nd Battalion, 11th Canadian Armoured Regiment (The Ontario Regiment) in February, 1940. Later that year he transferred to the regular component, the 11th Canadian Armoured Regiment (Ontario Regiment) at Cmp Borden. He proceeded overseas with the Regiment in June 1941, after undergoing training at the Armoured Fighting Vehicle School and qualifying as a Technical Adjutant.

Subsequent Regimental appointments saw Colonel Millen as a Lieutenant — Troop Leader, Battle Captain of "A" Squadron, Second-in-Command of "A" Squadron, then as Major — "A" Squadron Commander.

Colonel Millen's first action came as Second-in-Command of "A" Squadro, when the Regiment landed at Siracusa Harbour, Sicily as one of the tank regiments in the 1st Canadian Armoured Brigade, then in support of the British Eight Army. Promoted Major he led "A" Squadron through action in Sicily and Italy and was badly wounded on May 19 1944 in the fierce fighting at Aquino. He was returned to England from there invalided back to Canada.

From 1937 to 1952, Colonel Millen operated the Oshawa Business College, when he sold the business to enter real estate. He owns H. Millen Real Estate Limited in Oshawa, one of the largest real estate companies in the city.

Colonel Millen is married to the former Alice Moore and live at 781 Masson St. in Oshawa. He is a past president of the Oshawa Kiwanis Club, is chairman of the Oshawa Crippled Children's School Board of Directors, a member of the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce, the Oshawa Golf Club and the Royal Canadian Military Institute in Toronto.

Colonel Millen assumes the appointment of Honourary Lieutenant-Colonel with effect from 1 May 1970.

He's with Broadbent for leader, unless....

After Tommy Douglas — then what?

So wonders Mark W. Rose, MP, Fraser Valley West in his regular weekly newspaper column.

His last one this season should be of particular interest to Oshawa readers. Rose writes about Broadbent. He puts it this way:

The CCF-NDP has had a history of outstanding leaders. While they were in office and needed it, good press was hard to come by. But once they retire it's a different story — editorial writers fall all over themselves with tributes to them as enlightened men having a grasp of the present and a vision of the future.

"In about 10 months Tommy Douglas will step down as NDP national leader and it will be the task of the membership to fill in the blank left at the top of this page.

"In case you haven't noticed, I've already made my decision to back Ed Broadbent, M.P., the young (34) ex-political science prof who represents the Ontario industrial riding of Oshawa-Whitby. Ed is some-

Paul Bennett outlines positive approach

The Oshawa and District Council For the Arts held its final meeting for last year's term recently.

In an address to the Council, Paul Bennett, director of the Robert McLaughlin Gallery discussed the Arts in Oshawa.

"The activities are healthy" said Bennett. "that is, there are professional music teachers, professional artists and there's a dance academy, etc.

"But the Arts in Oshawa — administration isn't quite so happy.

"The simple administration of answering letters, following through on progressive needs to "tighten up."

"If we're going to compete in a community with a community entertainment world then you have to compete on business. There is so much leisure today — that has to be filled.

"Now the sports people can build arenas and so on because I am sure they use a very definite business approach.

"We've got to learn to do the same in the cultural field. I compliment the athletic people — we've got to learn to do as well.

"We are worth what we think we are worth. I think that many cultural groups go begging with hat in hand, instead of thinking to themselves, 'This is important.' It's simply a positive attitude instead of a negative attiude.

"I think I am positive because I think this gallery is one of the most important buildings in the city. We have in Oshawa, assembly lines — industry can de-humanize. The gallery and its activities bring back the creative approach to human life — that's why it's important."

two runs, two hits, zero errors.

Dick Haynes beat Tony's for the second time, to win the tournament and a trip to the Canadian Championship in Winnipeg. He struck out nine and allowed five hits. Haynes walked the first two batters of the game and Phil Solomon singled in one run. But London got that one back in the fifth on a walk, an infield hit and a ground out. Ted Morrison, who was struck out five times by Landers in the first two games, hit a home run in the sixth to win the game.

Highlights for Oshawa Tony's was the pitching of Pete Lander, who pitched 3½ games on Sunday and 2½ on Saturday. He struck out 62 batters in the 42 innings that he worked and had second hitters.

At bat, the leader was Jack Sneddon who went 10 for 24, and an average of 416, including three H-Rs. Phil Solomon and Rich March also tagged the ball consistently. On the field, the players backed up their pitcher with fine plays and few miscues.

HAPPY ?

By Francine Fortier

How happy can you get?

No more school for hundreds of Oshawa's ecstatic young children. And 10 weeks of summer holiday bliss to look forward to.

What are they going to do all summer? And now that the kids are at home, how does mother feel?

It wasn't hard catching the verbal as well as facial reactions of the mothers and children to this "pleasant-unpleasant" situation.

The kids? Most of them happy, happy, happy. In the last few weeks they've been busy with school field days — jumping, running, throwing balls — getting in perfect form for similar summer activities.

A few said they will miss their teachers and some of the fun of school days. But on the whole, everyone was looking forward to throwing away books.

No one was particulary concerned about a shortage of recreational facilities. For the kids there are plenty of things to do. Some said if they could ask for more, they wouldn't know what to ask for.

The mothers? Generally they were happy having their children home with them all summer. They did look a little "tired-er happier" than the kids did, however.

Mothers like to have rolling, bouncing children around bringing all sorts of sunshine into the home, even though it does mean more clothes to wash, more noise to listen to and more scrapes to bandage. Not really a holiday for mom — but it has its benefits.

In a survey woman were asked how they felt about having their children home all summer. One said, "I'm not a mother yet. But when I am one I'm going to make sure my children are away at summer school all summer."

Perhaps the "sound of children's laughter" isn't always such a joyful sound. It can be a little hard on the nerves eespecially when mother is used to a little bit of peace and quiet.

What do the mothers say?

Mrs. Eileen McLean, 339 Pine Avenue, "I have two school age children — I don't know what I'm going to do this summer for them yet. I think I'll let them take swimming lessons. I don't mind having them around at all — they usually find something to do."

Mrs. Johanna Awan, 360 Linden St., "I have one school age boy and a four-year-old, and I don't mind having them home for the summer. We'll go for picnics and they'll play with the neighborhood kids. There's plenty of things to do."

Mrs. Lorna Bacon, 862 Simcoe St. South, "I have four boys — 16, 14, 12 and 10, and I'm pleased to have them home. They play in the back yard, ride their bicycles, listen to the radio and when they're bored they help me with the housework — they're good at it."

What do the children say?

Synthia Vickers, eight, grade two at Adelaide McLaughlin elementary school, "I'm happy school's out. I have a lot to do this summer — swimming and all kinds of things."

David Carters, nine, grade two at E. A. Lovell elementary school, "I've got a lot of things to do this summer — go to cubs, swim, play baseball. I wish there were more things but I don't know what."

Derek Cocker, 10, grade five at E. A. Lovell elementary school, "I don't wish there was anything else to do in Oshawa this summer. There's so many things already."

How happy are they now that's school's out? This happy. From left, David Pcenicni, and Brian Burk, both grade two students at E. A. Lovell School.

School's out. And they're just showing you how thrilled they are. Christine Miyar, Alice Fice, Jennifer Elliot, Doris Fice and Marion Fice.

times satirically referred to as "landslide" Broadbent because in 1968 he upset former Tory cabinet minister Michael Starr by a mere 15 votes.

"Why support Broadbent, people have asked me — isn't he probably the least known of the possible major candidates such as veteran crown prince David Lewis, or economist Mel Watkins, or even John Harney, the bearded and bilingual secretary of the Ontario NDP.

"Aren't these men just as capable or even more capable than Ed Broadbent, a rookie M.P. who hasn't really yet had time to make his mark, either on Parliament or the country?

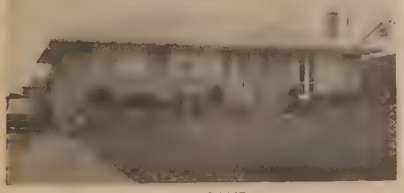
"If I were asked if I expected Broadbent to be someone who would fulfill the NDP's secret wish for a Messiah, someone who would generate a nationwide sweep like Dief and Trudeau were able to accomplish, the answer is "no".

"What I personally think of my leader matters very little to how Canadians vote. I believe that Tommy Douglas, for instance, is an extremely capable and contemporary man deserving far more electoral support than he has been given so far. In saying this, I acknowledge that one and a half million people did support our party and the 1968 vote distributed on a strict percentage basis would have awarded us over 50 seats in the House of Commons instead of the 23 we currently occupy.

"Today, whether we like it or note, television is focusing more and more attention on the party leaders. Television demands not an in-depth discussion of an issue but only a glimpse, a fleeting impression, or if you like, an "image" — and regrettably, the image left with a viewer is far more significant than anything the person appearing has said.

"My own experience confirms this. People often say to me, "I saw you on television the other night, Mark". When I ask if they liked what I said they appear uncomfortable and usually blurt out something like, "Oh hell, Mark, I don't remember what you said but you looked good."

"As much as the trend may be deplored an attractive T.V. image is demanded of today's political leaders. And Ed Broadbent comes across as an honest, concerned individual capable of communicating in a contemporary style to a larger segment of the electorate.



"It may be said that Ed is a young, obscure and fairly inexperienced — but Canadians from one end of the country to the other have flocked to young, onscure inexperienced leaders during recent years: Alex Campbell of P.E.I., Ed Schreyer of Manitoba, Robert Bourassa of Quebec, all under 40, all fit this description, (even PM Trudeau — he only fibbed a bit), and all seem to fulfill the expectations of most Canadians.

"So I'm with you, Ed — unless, of course, I decide to run myself. After all, I'm younger than Trudeau."

Sam was a funny little bird
Who would sing a song
And did nothing wrong

Then one day he heard
A call so strong
It rang out like a gong

Sam's heart went flutter
He began to mutter
And started to stutter

It was absurd
His mind went dong
And his heart went pong

She didn't say
And flew far away
Sam spoke no word
And sang no song

All for a female bird
With lashes so long
And a call so strong
But that same day

Something was wrong . . .
For poor little Sam bird
Had a heart that did long
For that sweet little bird with the sweet little song

When the moon was high
With a heavy sigh
Sam searched the sky

He waited all night
And hoped for the sight
Of the bird he knew would return

He knew he was right
With all of his might
And the fire in his heart that did burn

Time has passed on
And with many a dawn
The years have gone

And not since her flight
Has Sam seen the sight
Of the one for whom he does yearn

But night after night
Sam holds on tight
To the dream of his love's return

For Shack and Canada Games

For new system to run the city

CLEAR THE TRACK

"Clear the track, here comes Shack," went the song a few years ago.

Most have forgotten the song.

But Shack — Eddie Shack — lives on.

And he'll be in Oshawa Saturday to help promote of all things, the Canada Games.

Terry Kelly of Oshawa's Canada Games Committee announced a Shack-and-other-top-stars card for Saturday's Canada Games Parade.

Saturday is the climax of Oshawa's efforts to bring here in 1973 the Canada Summer Games. Kelly and a number of his committee members have been making a full-time job of the promotion effort for the games and it looks as if it's going to pay off. In fact, both the president and the vice-president of the Canadian Amateur Sports Federation, on visits to Oshawa have expressed confidence in our chances to get the Games.

John J. Hunnius, the president was here two weeks ago. He liked what he saw.

Vice-president Don Goodwin (see photo) was here earlier this week and

Of three major moves, legal jargon rules and free beer

In what was perhaps its "biggest" meeting of the current term, Oshawa City Council this week moved ahead on three major items that have been in the planning and discussion stage for months.

They are:

o Abolishing the board of control.

o Adoption in principle of the Murray Jones urban renewal scheme for downtown Oshawa.

o Replacement of a number of city departments by a department of planning and development.

Detailed reports and editorial

TURN TO PAGE 6

Oshawa's Board of Control was given the death knell by city council this week when it torpedoed its five member super structure into oblivion.

After years of discussion that culminated in intensive pursuit of the "kill" by a number of city council members earlier this year, proponents of the Board of Control lost in a two-thirds majority vote of council in favor of abolishing the Board as of the last of this year.

Approval of the Ontario Municipal Board is required to make it official, but the 9-6 vote in favor of abolishment is thought to be sufficient. Earlier this year moves by Board abolishers failed when the required two-third majority was not obtained, and the city's solicitor's advice was that in all likelihood two-thirds was necessary.

(The Municipal Act is not clear on the subject in that it stipulates Boards of Control may be abolished by two-thirds votes in cities of over 100,000 population, while it leaves "up in the air" the vote requirement for smaller centres such as Oshawa, with 85,000 people.)

In abolishing the Board of Control,

See end of red tape in new setup

City council's fight against "red tape and buck passing" is taking on shape now that council has instructed the Board of Control to start planning for a department of planning and development to replace a number of separate city departments.

Countless meetings of elected officials and city department heads have been held to bring into focus the proposal earlier this year by Alderman Ed McNeely, to do some streamlining of various departments.

Two months ago, council referred the matter to the Board of Control, asking it to make a recommendation to council. The Board met, and dis-

Sunday fair opening wins by narrow margin in council

The upcoming Oshawa Fair's proposed Sunday opening had a narrow escape in city council this week when a deciding vote by Mayor Bruce Mackey turned the tide.

The Fair Board in a letter to council asked official permission to open its doors on Sunday for the first time in its history. No opposition had been foreseen by the Parks, Property and Recreation Committee which favored the Sunday hours.

But Alderman Gib Murdoch started the ball rolling. He was against it, because the people in the Alexandra Park neigh-

SHORT TAKES

SHOPLIFTING
The increase of shoplifting in large stores was discussed at the regular meeting of the Westmount Kiwanis Club. Alex Deans, chief of security for Eaton's of Canada was the speaker.

PARKING FUNDS
Since new meter rates and increased fines went into effect in Whitby April 21, parking revenue has almost doubled, it was revealed in a report to council last week.

The report by treasurer F. N. McEwen was forwarded to the Whitby "action committee" whose project is the restoration of downtown Whitby.

LEE LOSES
Don Lee, president of the Oshawa Tenants Association lost in his bid to lead the Ontario Tenants Association lost in his bid to lead the Ontario Tenants Association to a Burlington insurance investigator. Lee made his bid at a three-day convention of tenants associations in Hamilton. The Oshawa tenant president succeeded in a bid for the post as education chairman of the Ontario association.

PARTY FOR TEACHER
The Ontario County eparate School Board held a special retirement party last week for Mary Fitzgerald, a 39-year veteran of teaching. For 29 years Miss Fitzgerald taught at Oshawa's Holy Cross School.

FOR THE GAMES
"The biggest demonstration day in Oshawa's history," he called it. Terry Kelly gave his Canada Games Parade this coming Saturday a boost with those words to the Oshawa Kiwanis Club. He called on club members to back up the city's bid for the 1973 Canada Summer Games. "What we need most is the conviction expressed by you, that Oshawa wants the Games, should have the Games and that Oshawa is the logical place to hold them." Kelly said.

$100,000 LESS
"I'm not one bit unhappy," commented Chief Jon Jenkins last week when the low tender for the proposed $3 million Oshawa police building came in $100,000 less than estimated. Noren Construction Company Ltd., of Weston submitted a low bid of $614,567 for the basic strcuture. Construction could start Sept. 1 on Church Street, between Richmond and William, on the site now occupied by the Canadian Corps.

REWARD POLICY
A new policy to reward Whitby athletes who win provincial national or international awards was approved by Whitby Council last week. The policy provides engraved medals for provincial champs, plaques for national winners, while international winners will be recognized "at the council's discretion.

PP HEADS OLT

Others on the executive are: Tony Castaldo, vice president; Irene Dyl, secretary; Allison Johnston, treasurer. D'Arcy Smith Smyth is immediate past president.

SHRINERS GO NORTH
Oshawa Shriners were among 2,000 who attended the weekend's semi-annual Shriners meeting in North Bay. Members came from all over Ontario and as far away as Florida and Texas.

SEEK CONTRACT
Meetings were scheduled yesterday and today to settle on terms of a new contract for the 70 office workers of the Ontario County Board of Education. The workers involved are a unit of Local 251, Canadian Union of Public Employees, which represents city hall office staff.

INCORPORATE FIVE
Five Oshawa and area firms have been granted letters patent of incorporation, it was announced in the Ontario Gazette last week. The five firms: Donevan and Fleischman Co. Ltd., Oshawa; Fletcher-Henchell Thermal Industries Ltd, Oshawa; A. Goreski Construction Ltd., Oshawa, Jonal Electrical Consulting Ltd., Oshawa and Davie Pharmacy Ltd, Uxbridge.

FLOWER GIRLS
The hundreds of paper flowers that decorated the Festival Rose Queen's car in the July 1 parade were made by the junior girls at Simcoe Hall and members of the White Cross Centre through the co-operation of Mrs. Janet Gerrie, director of girls' clubs.

ROSES, ROSES
Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chapman recently returned from their holiday in England, their first return visit since coming to Canada some 20 years ago. Asked for his lingering impression Harry replied "Roses. Roses everywhere. You can smell them as you walk along the street."

Marks for manager?

Alex Tur, an Albert Street resident, has suggested to City Council that former mayor Ernest Marks be appointed city manager.

In a letter to council this week, Tur suggests an "outside applicant" be not considered for the job. He calls the former mayor "the finest of them all" and says there's no one between Oshawa and Montreal like him.

borhood were already forced to put up with noise "during the week" and that the Sunday hours would mean additional encroachment on their Sunday privacy.

Alderman Norman Down couldn't understand why this year the fair should be open on Sunday where for 50 years it had not been.

Alderman Ed McNeely threw in that the Park should be made more accessible for the general public to use.

Controller C. E. McIlveen, parks chairman, said the Park "it for the citizens and it's used that way."

Alderman John Humphreys offered that it was better to have the fair on Sunday than motorcycle races on Saturdays.

Alderman Jim Potticary countered with an "I don't see the need for this on Sundays."

Controller Christine Thomas wondered about "double time pay" for city employees who will be forced to work that Sunday.

Not a single argument based on religious objections passed the council revue.

LARGER PLANT
Andrew Antenna Ltd., a Whitby firm, is planning a 125,000 square foot plant adjacent to its existing Beech Street facilities in Whitby. The plan, now before Whitby's town solicitor for study, calls for construction by 1975.

MORE WATCHED
The fact that attendance for this year's Dominion Day parade was much higher than last year was attributed mainly to the weather by Bill Tredwell, parade committee chairman. Tredwell felt the General Motors holiday falling on Friday instead of Wednesday did not seriously affect the turnout.

$100 GRANT
Whitby council last week decided to grant the Oshawa Whitby Big Brothers Association $100.

Control Board gets death knell

Council repealed the bylaw which established the Board in 1966.

A number of council members called Alderman Ed McNeely's motion calling for abolishment out of order, because two aldermen, Russ McNeil and Gordon Attersley, were absent from the meeting. However, it was pointed out that both aldermen were on opposite sides of the question the most recent time it was debated in council, and thus it "wouldn't make any difference."

Alderman Gib Murdoch pressed with a "let's deal with it now; in the summer we'll never have them all here."

SURPRISE
The surprise move this time came from Alderman Jim Potticary who had previously voted in favor of keeping the Board of Control in operation. "I couldn't vote for something I knew nothing about," Potticary explained in revealing his switch to his colleagues. "But now that I've studied it in detail . . . I'll support it."

Alderman Bill Werry accused councillors in favor of the abolishment that they were "getting the steamroller out." He suggested that the minority opinion of council be also presented to the Municipal Board when it considers city council's decision in favor of abolishment.

Controller Christine Thomas couldn't see why changes in the city's government structure should be made now that regional government and its changes are pending. She accused fellow councillors of substituting a "handpicked appointed board of control" for the elected one of which she is a member. With a $35,000 city manager and a secretary, "parkinson's law will be in operation at city hall," said Mrs. Thomas.

And then Alderman McNeely read his motion in full, at the request of Controller Dafoe.

And then Controller Shaw jumped up and angrily announced "I'm not going to sit here and take this. I shall walk out," but didn't. Mrs. Shaw said she had understood the McNeely motion under debate (actually the bylaw to repeal the bylaw appointing the board) would include suggestions for a replacement of the Board of Control.

City solicitor H. J. Couch explained this would be accomplished separately.

Mrs. Shaw accused Mayor Mackey of "railroading this thing through," in the same breath reprimanding the mayor for having suggested that "you want your own car to drive through the city."

THE VOTE
The 9-6 vote went as follows, first the no-votes: Mrs. Shaw, Mrs. Thomas, Controller Dafoe, Aldermen Reardon, Werry and Pilkey. The yes-votes were from the mayor, Controller McIlveen and Aldermen Murdoch, Bestwick, Potticary, Down, Gibson, Humphreys and McNeely.

To mall it is for downtown Oshawa

In one of its shortest urban renewal discussions on record, Oshawa City Council this week approved in principle the Murray Jones plan for the renewal of downtown Oshawa.

That means "to mall."

Jones' concept for downtown Oshawa looks for a large number of institutional and office buildings downtown and a mall concept that has come under a lot of fire from downtown merchants.

Alderman Gib Murdoch, who presented a motion for approval in principle to council said the approval does not mean rigid development rules for downtown. He said the concept is flexible and subject to change.

However, he pointed out, it will give us a framework developers can work within.

Murdoch agreed the scheme as it stands with its mall concept is not designed with the interest of the downtown merchants in mind primarily.

Alderman Ross Gibson said he agreed with "stage one" of the Murray Jones plan, "but I can't see the malls, unless they're covered," and added he was opposed to tearing up a million dollars worth of streets downtown.

Council's approval in principle means the plan can now be filed with the federal departments connected with urban renewal, which will assure Oshawa is considered if and when urban renewal funds — frozen for the time being — become available.

editorial

Bravo! Three in one night for council

City Council this week deserves a big pat on the back for finally coming to grips with a number of long-overdue items on its agenda.

Council passed in principle the Murray Jones Urban Renewal Scheme.

Council abolished the Board of Control.

Council made great headway in its hitherto slow process to cut city hall red tape.

URBAN RENEWAL

The urban renewal scheme has been discussed, re-discussed, hashed and rehashed and now that it's finally become official city policy perhaps the thousands of dollars already spent on the Jones study will start to bear some fruit. The scheme is basically sound. The various ways of implementing it are many. It's exciting still, even though for the time being the federal government has put the damper on things by freezing all urban renewal grant money.

Developers with plans for downtown Oshawa — and there are several — now have a rough blueprint of the future pattern of the downtown core. They were hopelessly lost without it.

Now, according to urban renewal spokesmen we can look forward to some concrete action in the near future.

So things look rosy, and Oshawa's downtown has a new lease on life. One that'll help it survive.

BOARD OF CONTROL

Oshawa's Board of Control made a prime case for its own abolishment once more this week, when its membership as a whole decided it was unable to take action on the suggestion in the third part of this editorial. The Board is supposed to act as council's guide — it's parent, if you like. But during the past few years it hasn't accomplished much except quarrel, the way some parents do. And then the kids rebel . . . . .

It's not that simple with the Board of Control, granted. But the why-nots of the Board have been discussed in the Oshawa press constantly for some time. And the biggest builder of a case against a Board of Control has been the Board itself.

We are confident the Ontario Municipal Board will see things in the same light as the majority of council.

Oshawa deserves a better system.

NEW DEPARTMENT

And so does it deserve more streamlining in the departments at city hall as well. Even the little fellow coming in to pay his tax bill, or asking for an explanation about a notice re garbage collection knows about city hall's red tape. And Oshawa is not unique in its municipal red tape. Governments all bring with them too much tape, and some of it is worse than red.

It is promising for Oshawa that it has a number of politicians who are taking this bull by the horns, recognizing that complacency will get us nowhere, and that it's time for a breath of fresh air through the halls (and some of the new but musty offices) of city hall.

Combining urban renewal, industrial and commercial development, planning, real estate, and perhaps even the control of subdivisions into one, makes sense. Not because "it's bigger and thus better," because that theory doesn't hold water, but because we can save a fortune on duplication, errors, lack of communication and manpower. And because we can finally do a little concentrating on the public relations aspect of our city and its relationship to us as taxpayers.

Hats off to the accomplishers on council!

Let's get on with the Fair!

"One hell of a mess."

That's Doug Johns' description of the Oshawa Fair facilities at Alexandra Park.

Johns is chairman of the Fair Board. He's also quite correct.

The newest building on the grounds was built more than seven years ago and the remainder date between 1906 and 1930.

The horse and general exhibit building are in dreadful condition. For some years the Board has been trying to obtain a city building permit to renovate or re-build, but to no avail. City officials want the whole thing "out of there."

And they're right. The existing site does not offer the future an Oshawa Fair deserves.

So we're off looking for a new site, and according to Controller Charles McIlveen, Oshawa's parks chairman, a few good possibilities are available. Just where and what will remain a secret to prevent land speculation.

McIlveen's committee is setting its sights on London's annual fair as an example of what ours should be. The committee is to visit London to inspect the facilities in order to come back with a detailed recommendation.

This is good thinking. After the CNE, the London Fair is no doubt the biggest and best in Ontario, with Norfolk Fair at Simcoe, ranking third.

Oshawa is making great strides in its effort to attract the Canada Games. Certainly, these will bring the city much needed facilities at an economical cost, and they'll bring all of us a lot of fun. But perhaps even more, they'll assist in the city's effort to put Oshawa on the map as a great place to live, to work, to bring up one's children and to establish one's industry.

While we get all enthused about the Canada Games, let us not forget the steady promotional effect "the best fair in the land" could have on Oshawa.

Put the same talent and effort we are putting into the Canada Games into an annual Oshawa Fair, and we've got it — the biggest and the best!

Kitchener bends rules to build

If Oshawa's municipal officials are really interested in helping provide lower cost housing, they might take a look at what Kitchener is doing.

By reducing some of the standards and easing some of the municipal restrictions, Kitchener has helped builders there cut as much as $2,500 from the price of a house.

Yet the different standards are not noticeable unless one is told about them before hand. Roadways are 50 feet instead of 66, lots are permitted to be as narrow as 40 feet instead of 50. They can be 4,000 square feet instead of 5,000. There are no sidewalks except around, or in the vicinity of a school. There are no municipal tree plantings. The water service into each house is reduced in size from one inch pipe to five eighths pipe.

The city of Kitchener insists that each new subdivision must have one area in which these new standards apply. It's called a special development zone and the savings the builders enjoy must be passed on to the buyers. The city also requires that 50 per cent of all houses in a special development zone must sell at prices under $20,000 and the remainder cannot exceed $23,000.

In the special development zones all the services such as hydro and telephone are underground and out of sight. And the zones are integrated into areas where conventional standards apply.

In one particular newly blossoming area on Kitchener's west side, called Forest Heights, you can drive around the streets of new houses and find it very difficult to tell when you are in the special development zone, and when you have passed out of it.

Half the houses sell at $19,999. To buy such a house requires a down payment of $1,009. The rest of the price is secured by one NHA mortgage of $18,990.

How I envy television journalists — these guys who sit on their swivel chairs interviewing the high and mighty of the world, and who make the whole thing look as if it's the greatest relaxer on earth.

Take David Frost. He's more relaxed on the screen — he has me convinced anyway, and I've studied him carefully — than I am sitting in a lawn-chair near the flowerbed that I was supposed to start cleaning up the last week in May. (I sit there quite often, and the keeper of the lawns and flowerbeds tells me every time the work I have not yet done must be a major influence on my relaxation capacity.)

So I've studied Frost, and a few others. And even Harvey Kirck appeared to be enjoying the whole thing the other day. And there I was bright and early last Wednesday morning, July 1, and being asked by the mayor of Oshawa if it would be easier on me if he held my hand . . .

Every Wednesday at 6.30 "THIS WEEK WITH BROUWER" is to be seen on Channel 8, Cable Television. The programs are to be live, and mainly centering on things Oshawa, and particularly things politic.

Last week's effort was not live, because the star of the show was earning a well-deserved rest at his cottage by the time the program was televised.

But I'll let you in on my agonies of July 1.

Up at 6.30 a.m. Stumble down into the kitchen, make coffee, while pouring over all the latest edicts and statements issued by one Mayor Mackey. Thence into the office, to type out a script.

The script had a great start. When I read it to myself in front of the bathroom mirror it sounded great. Very professional. Of course I had dubbed in the mayor's answers, thus all the more showing my superior intellect as an interviewer. . .

Then came 8 a.m. and time for breakfast. Well, by this time the nerves were starting to get the better of me. I couldn't eat. The kids were getting a chuckle out of the whole thing. . .

I left for the Cable TV office. The door to the Mall was closed. "I've got the wrong day, it's only Tuesday . . ." I hoped in vain. But Cable TV's back door was open. I walked in bravely. One of the bossmen was giving his "wirers" instructions about wiring. He let me make a coffee to steady my nerves. I gulped it down, and it stayed down.

"Where's Jim Sabyan. Is he going to make it in time," I wondered. Call to Sabyan's. He had left. (Sabe runs the camera.)

In he walked.

Relax.

Then in walks one debonair Mayor Mackey. "Let's get on with this. I've got to be at the start of the parade at 10 a.m."

The mayor ushers himself to his chair. He looks very sure of himself. As if he was on TV every day of the week. When Sabyan puts the mike around his worship's head, it becomes obvious he's used to this microphone business. With me, the tie gets in the way, then my left arm, and then my feet. Eventually the mikes are in place.

Sabe switches the lights on.

I light a cigaret and try to look relaxed.

The mayor explains there are a couple of things he would like to elaborate on. I'm quietly hoping he will keep on elaborating and then some, because by now I've forgotten everything I was going to ask anyway.

Sabe starts the countdown.

I blurt out that fantastic opening blurb I wrote earlier in the morning.

Somehow it doesn't come off. That makes me more nervous.

I explain to his worship that I'm nervous, and if you were in the audience last Wednesday, you'll know it. Then came the real blow, and his worship offered to hold my hand, which I rejected as a matter of principle.

And then we got into a few issues, and all went reasonably well, I thought.

20 minutes later we saw a piece of the tape.

City officials with DeHavilland's Twin Otter, Monday.

"How bald and fat you are, and how little boom there is to your voice," I concluded, and I wasn't talking about his worship.

But that was last week, and this week it's Margaret Shaw. Now, if she'll hold my hand. . .

ARRIVING: ONE OPA? ONE OMA

After all that pressure though, July 1 was a great day. We saw the parade, some of which was impressive and brings on high hopes for the upcoming Canada Games parade. And the various queens too, looked mighty fine. The turnout was much better than last year's and there was a lot of fun to be had at Alexandra Park. (See this week's picture story.)

After that for the Brouwers it was off to Toronto airport and the arrival of "opa" and "oma" from the Netherlands. When all the Brouwer tribes from Toronto and Oshawa gather at Toronto airport to welcome grandparents, it becomes obvious that something went wrong with the planning for this airport. There should be more room for five sets of parents with six, plus three, plus four, plus two, plus one grandchildren. As it was, we were sandwiched in between the other sons and daughters and grandchildren who came to welcome more grandparents and parents and brothers and sisters. In short, it was one big happy reunion.

And then on the weekend, my whole tribe was taught the finer points of the Dutch language. The grandparents of our tribe are reasonably bilingual, but they find it most important that their second generation offspring know the greatest language of the world. . .

Also on the weekend, it was off to Balsam Lake where the bass is plentiful and the water just nice for swimming. And we came home exhausted, and found out at church the next day that a thief had lifted all the contributions from the collection box last Sunday night . . .

STOL FLIGHT

And that brings things up to date until Monday morning when a few lucky ones among us went flying courtesy the industrial commissioner and DeHavilland Aircraft.

Commish Robert J. Nicol had invited the press to be an eye and earwitness of the fine performance of the DeHavilland Twin Otter known for its STOL.

STOL is for Short Takeoff and Landing, and pilot George Northrop of DeHavilland gave a practical demonstration on the Oshawa Airport runway. This aircraft carries 20 passengers and cruises at 182 knots at 10,000 feet. It, and DeHavilland's DHC-7 which will carry 48 passengers are the airplanes that will help make commuter services to and from Oshawa airport possible.

Quipped one of the politicians on hand for the demonstration, "we should have brought John DeHart." Mr. DeHart is on record as an opponent of airport expansion in Oshawa, favoring the removal of Oshawa Airport to another location.

The company showed slides and played records of the lack of noise that comes with the DHC-7. These proved that this aircraft can operate without undue disturbance of the quiet life in the residential areas abutting Oshawa Airport.

The possibilities of Oshawa Airport becoming a commuter airport were discussed in brief and one of the DeHavilland people talked of a plan put to the Ontario Government which is similar to the Go-train setup.

The idea of a Go-fly network of transportation does indeed sound interesting.

Our editorial department plans to examine closely in the next few weeks the possibilities of passenger service in and out of Oshawa.

For weeks now,
we have been suffocating in plaster dust

the daylight is settling and things are taking shape beautifully. Just like in those glorious old movies, we soon will have conquered all and will walk off hand-in hand into the golden sunset. It's really not quite as romantic as that but it is a lot of fun conjuring up different ideas for displays and such-trying to create a feeling of a totally different atmosphere to what folks are used to. We think we are succeeding and in the very near futurewe will be able to offer our-

Student fires ideas at city council for summertime youth programs

Invest in your young people, and we'll end up with a much better Oshawa.

So says Anastasius Lakas, an Oshawa student at the University of Waterloo, who has prepared a brief to city council on a new youth program.

Lakas argues that this summer, more than in recent years, a large number of high school students are unemployed and that some action is required so this unemployment does not result in an increased petty crime rate and young people ending up with criminal records.

Says Lakas: "the solution is not to give to the young people, but to invest in them. Although adverse to many opinions, most young people would rather earn their way doing what they like best. It certainly beats earning your wages by doing something you do not like. How can one be responsible, productive, or even happy, which is the greatest purpose in life, when a person is occupied doing something he or she does not like? The investment you make now perhaps will make more people culturally happy, citizens of the community."

The Lakas program calls for the city to put up an unnamed amount of money which would be allocated by a committee that would consider proposals from various groups of young people in the community.

FACILITIES;

Once a group has decided what it wants to do workshops must be made available to carry out its program. Classroom workshops could be set up in the following schools: Vanier, Central or E. A. Lovell. These schools are best because they are accessible to the central downtown core, Memorial Park, the Drop-In Centre, the Library, the City Hall, Rotary Swimming Pool and the Art Gallery, all which are public property and available for use. The two high schools themselves have many facilities which sit idle throughout the summer, and should be utilized for maximum use of taxpayers' money.

Programs proposed by Lakas are: Drama, Fine Art, Music, Science, Social Studies, Humanities, and Engineering.

Citizens in the area who are talented or educated in a field which a group of people are pursuing would be the resource people. Their service can be voluntary and they must be in no way considered to be supervisory staff, but rather thought of as guides.

Lakas lists these advantages to the city:

1. An opportunity for the city to show it is involved in youth who are not athletically inclined.
2. It will give young people who have no job to do something they might want to do.
3. Youth will meet new people from other schools and parts of the city.
4. A place for talented people and university students to pursue various studies with young people.
5. A centre for social activity for youth who are really interested in doing things.
6. A change for the young people to show how responsible youth really can be.

The program is simple and the responsibility for the greater part lies in the hands of the youth. The success of the programme depends on two groups — the city bureaucracy, by making a building and money available, and the youth in terms of productive programmes and responsible participation. The programme is simple and co-operative. The group which does not co-operate with equal intensity will be the failure of the program, Lakas says.

He also recommends:

* Seminars between youth and the local police as well as city administrators so that they might communicate and understand each other easier.
* A drug control centre where people can go in anonomity so they can't be questioned by police or parents.
* Buses be provided with minimal or no cost for weekend camping trips, or one day picnics to local conservation areas.
* Free films be shown or at minimal cost in an area which can accommodate a large group of people, i.e. bandshell, library auditorium. E. A. Lovell yard.
* A liaison in the form of a three or four member committee with elected city administrators to help youth institute new programs and hear grievances.
* A place designated where all people in Oshawa be allowed to display their creations and sell them to the public on a regular basis, i.e. Kitchener Market.

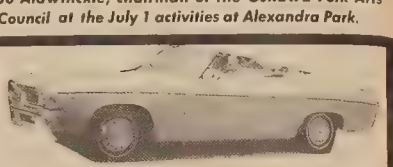
Camp openings available

The fun and enjoyment of the wide outdoors will be enjoyed by many Oshawa children this summer.

The Oshawa Recreation Department is once again hosting the Pioneer Day Camp for the city children. There will be four camps held over a five week period. The dates of the camp are as follows:

Camp 1
Mon. July 13 — Fri. July 17.
Camp 2
Mon. July 20 — Fri. July 24
Camp 3
Mon. July 27 — Fri. July 31.
Camp 4
Tues. Aug. 4 — Fri. Aug. 14
(excluding the weekend of Aug. 8 and 9)

There are still a few openings in all camps and all those interested are asked to register now to avoid disappointment. The camp fees are $8 per camper for the first three camps and $15 for Camp 4, (two week camp). To register your child, contact the Recreation Department and a brochure will be sent to you, or if you are in the area, drop in at the Recreation Department offices and register in person.



What do the campers do? Rain or shine the campers participate in the Pioneer Day Camp program. This program is "campcraft" and "nature lore" oriented. Each day is packed with activities such as hiking, nature study, cookouts, campcraft skills, wide games, competitions, singsongs, special events and projects.

BATIKING FOR FASHION

A brilliant explosion of color on cloth has been de rigueur in high fashion circles for some time now and promises to be even more so thanks to the latest trend in art — batik dyeing and tie-dyeing.

According to Estelle Post, well-known Toronto batik craftsman, many girls are now using batik-designed material as dress lengths even though batik is essentially an art form.

The dyeing, an art which had its origin many years ago in Java, is done in four steps. The artist first draws a pattern on the cloth with charcoal then paints hot wax on the pattern with a paint brush or tjanting, an Indonesian pen-like instrument with a cup for hot wax. (The waxed areas retain the original color of the fabric and the delicacy of the pattern determines the size of the brush.) In the third step, the craftsman dips the cloth in "Procion" cold water dyes then, 24 hours later, places the cloth in boiling water to remove the wax.

For a crackle effect, the artist can crumple the cloth to crack the hardened wax.

The wax can be heated in an electric frying pan, a glue pot, a double boiler or any similar utensil. Miss Post herself uses a 40-watt electric bulb partially submerged in a can of wax. The bulb is hot enough to melt the wax without scorching it.

She has found the combination of one-third beeswax and two-third paraffin wax most satisfactory.

The wax can be removed either by boiling or by placing the material between two sheets of newspaper and ironing — although this method never completely removes all the wax and the material becomes a little stiff.

If the cloth is ironed and stiffly starched before batiking, sharp images are created. To protect tables and furniture from hot wax, the cloth should be placed on a table covered with newspapers and wax paper or stretched on a wooden frame sold in art shops.

Floral geometric or rainbow configurations can be made this way but for circular patterns, tie-dyeing is the best bet.

Wrap the fabric around a round object and tie string tightly below it. Then tie string around the fabric at chosen intervals below the object. Dip the fabric in a dye bath. The string protects the material from the dye, creating a circular pattern.

The batik technique of dyeing, which is in the midst of a revival in Canada, is actually a centuries-old art form which spread across south-east Asia in 400 A.D.

The process down through the years was long and complex, involving azoic dyes and chemical baths.

Today, however, modern chemistry has come up with "Procion" dyes as dazzling and vivid as dyes of old but with the modern advantages of lightfastness and washfastness. They are reactive dyes which combine with the fabric through a chemical process whereas regular dyes merely adhere physically to the surface of the fibres.

Miss Post, who discovered the availability of "Procion" dyes in 1966, is now a retail distributor for the dyes in all of Canada except British Columbia.

Intricate geometric patterns can be created by means of batik dyeing and circular patterns splashed on cloth in tie-dyeing. Model above wears a tie-dyed sari in orange and yellow. Draped beside her is a length of fabric, also tie-dyed in crimson, green and yellow.

Come back to work smiling

By Francine Fortier

During that break halfway through the working day it's nice to be able to sneak off to some little nook where you can happily munch.

Not everybody, however, has the same type of "lunch nook" dream.

Some people dream of a pretty little garden where they can drink-in the fresh air along with their coffee. Some people envision themselves in a sun-filled room with lots of friendly lunchers around them. Yet others long for a soothing atmosphere and a private corner to unfold in.

Adelaide House at the YWCA fits this bill. Unknown to the majority of Oshawa people a public cafeteria has been operating from Adelaide House for 25 years.

Prices are reasonable and the atmosphere is versatile.

Take the dining room for example. This is the cozy, dimly-lit, peaceful little corner in which you can breathe freely for awhile. Dark panelling, antique buffets, a high carved ceiling with low hanging chandelier, a polished hardwood floor with tables to match, and stained glass windows are all part of what makes this room comfortable. And if you want something to look at besides your lunch, you can sit by the windows and look out over the gardens. This room seats about 34.

Then there's the sunroom. It's a high-ceiling room with blue and green flowered curtains and black and white checkered tile on the floor. This is the favorite of all the lunch areas at Adelaide House and seats 28. Why is is called the sunroom?

It could be because it's windows overlook the garden patio, and the sun pours in all day, and you can hear the singing of the birds outside.

Finally, there is the terrace. Anyone can sit out here in the garden at a patio table and chairs. The garden is big with petunias, lots of grass, shrubbery, and huge pine and spruce trees. The terrace seats 20.

Barbara Copp, executive director of the YWCA, says the "Y" has the only cafeteria service in the city. It's open from Monday to Friday, 12-1:30 p.m., and 5:15-6:30 p.m. and Saturdays — 12-1:30 p.m.

"We don't get that much of a crowd here" she says, "But those who do come, come regularly.

"The best food is the pastry. It is excellent — everybody says so."

Nine permanent employees work on the cafeteria staff and concoct such things as butter tarts, rhubarb pie, cherry cheese cake, strawberry shortcake, mince meat pie, hot rice pudding, hot cabbage rolls, fried chicken, roast beef, roast pork, fish and chips, salads and sandwiches.

The cafeteria is open all year round except from July 20 until August 3. Adelaide House is at 199 Center Street and parking is next door, just off of McGregor Street.

Sneak away to the Y's cafeteria some day and come back to work smiling.

Games parade set for Saturday said "I'm very positively impressed." He pointed to Oshawa's civic auditorium complex as "a great potential thing already in existence."

It's important to Games officials that a large single site complex is available for an event such as the Summer Games, and the fact that Oshawa offers facilities for nine sports in the same complex is thought to weigh heavily in its favor. The Civic complex offers facilities for track and field, swimming, diving, team handball, rugger, soccer, field hockey, lacrosse and tennis, all sought for the games.

Frenchmen's Bay has been picked as the site for the canoe races, Kelly announced yesterday.

As for Saturday's mammoth parade, the organizers hope for a mammoth Oshawa turnout. "It's important we show that we're really behind this thing. That we can do it, and will do it," Kelly said.

The parade starts at 9 a.m. at Alexandra Park, goes down Simcoe, then along Centre past City Hall and up to Memorial Park where Mayor Bruce Mackey will receive Oshawa's Canada Games brief which he will take up and deliver in person to President Hunnius in Montreal.

Games officials will be on hand for the parade.

World Champion skater Don Jackson (coming in from Banff) and numerous other athletes of fame will join Shack in Saturday's events.

(Shack is the card to-replace Bobby Orr, who had to cancel out of Oshawa's plans at the last minute. Orr, who is attending a wedding, is sending "some colleagues" however.)

The parade will include demonstrations by representatives of nearly all sports involved in the Games. Plans call for a swimming pool as part of the setup.

"Get involved, join the demonstration," is Kelly's call.

Milt Dunnell of the Toronto Star quoted Bobby Orr on Monday as saying "join in the campaign (at Parry Sound) 'the way Oshawa did it' " Says Kelly: "That's the spirit."

He likes to look back at 1949 when Oshawa had a population of 28,000 and that in 1970 it has 88,000, and that "these 60,000 came from somewhere. Many came from Europe, the Maritimes and other parts of Canada. They helped make the Auditorium Complex a success — they all dug in. We built ourselves, for ourselves. And the same people make the Canada Games, and they'll make it the success that Canada deserves," Kelly said.

Council's 'super department'

cussed, but members were unable to agree about what department should and should not be included, and the Board recommended in a motion to council Monday that "no action" be taken.

Council overruled the Board's no-action decision, and a motion was passed ordering the Board to set the wheels in motion for the new department of planning and development to encompass the existing departments of urban renewal, real estate, subdivision control, business and industry and planning.

McNeely chided the Board of Control for adopting "the attitude that we can't do anything with it." He told Board members: "You are the senior body. You ran for the position. This is the very thing within the field of your competence, and I'm satisfied you can deal with it."

Controller Christine Thomas asked McNeely to provide "specifics" such as "who'll be in charge ? An engineer?" She said since a few changes had been made in the public works department "things are quite satisfactory and there's no more running and waiting around."

(The subdivision control department in particular has been under fire from aldermen and developers on a number of occasions over the past few years.)

Controller Margaret Shaw accused city department heads by with a "there are too many of you trying to hang on to your own little ivory tower." She said "some of you agreed at first with our recommendations, then you changed your minds. It has now become the responsibility of the elected people to take things in hand and to do something about it. You don't need a degree to realize and see what's going on at city hall."

While Liberace's brief but dazzling appearance at Civic Auditorium fades into memory, for Vienna Adams it will remain an experience she will never forget.

The nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Adams, Nipigon Street, decided she would present her idol with a bouquet of roses and, despite officialdom. bodyguards and barricades, she did.

It was next to an impossibility to get near the star but two city aldermen and some members of the press were given the nod. Mrs. Adams and Vienna were there, too. They had forgone the last few moments of the show in order to be first at the barricade. It was in those moments that Liberace "blew" out the candles in the famous candelabra and turned on twinkling lights in his jewel-studded jacket. I learned that an electronics expert at Cape Kennedy Spacecraft Centre had devised this ingenious effect for the earth-bound star

After a 20-minute wait, Liberace appeared, groomed to perfection and wearing a beautiful, light navy blue suit. He seemed shy and a little uneasy but he smiled the famous smile and shook hands all around. He was surprised and pleased with the roses Vienna presented and, like most little girls when the great moment finally came, she lost her tongue.

Alderman Gordon Attersley made a presentation of an engraved copper tray from the City of Oshawa and a set of coasters in enamelled copper depicting models of antique cars. This was a token gift from Larry Gough of General Motors.

"We know you're an antique car buff," quipped Alderman Attersley. "We don't build antique cars in Oshawa, but General Motors would like you to accept this little souvenir of your visit."

The bodyguard seemed anxious to get their charge away from us. He signed a few autographs and we had a close look at the diamond rings.

"Did you really go to Buckingham Palace?" I asked. "Did you wear your diamonds?"

"Yes," he replied to both questions, adding, "The Queen has more diamonds than I have. She has to work harder for hers though and I understand she has them on a sort of temporary basis."

That was it. It had been a great musical experience from the moment Liberace mounted the stage wearing his black maxi coat trimmed with chinchilla and sat at his grand piano with the plexi-glass top, to enthrall us with his florid pianistics, his incredible chromatics and embellishments of favorite themes.

At the close of a generous half-hour of encores, he received a standing ovation from an excited audience of over four thousand.

Liberace was accompanied by his Show Time Band, conducted by Gordon Robinson D. Mus., a Torontonian by birth who has been Lee's conductor and music arranger for 17 years.

Equally deserving the ovation was the Trinidad Steel Band directed by the Reverand John Stewart. The group, "discovered" at Expo'67 by Liberace, produced orchestral tones from their steel oil drums in the Poet and Peasant Overture and the sound of a mighty organ in the Hallelujah Chorus.

Everyone went home happy especially Bill Kurelo thinking of the biggest gross the Civic has ever made and Liberace to dream of the Koh-i-noor getting nearer and nearer.

500 high school students

More than 500 Ontario secondary school students will journey across Canada in the next two months under the Interprovincial Youth Travel program.

Known as the Young Voyageur Program, its objective is to give students an opportunity to develop a closer understanding of how other young Canadians live and work in their own communities.

Schools participating in the program are picked on a regional basis and student selection is usually limited to one per school. Preference is given to Grade 11 students between 15 and 17 years of age.

More than 16,000 students have taken part in the program in the past six years.

Celebrities dissect fashion scene

By Jo Aldwinckle
Women's editor

Perched on stands of varying heights, an array of celebrity guests argued back and forth during the Designer Speak-In breakfast at the Waldorf Astoria, New York, about the current state of fashion and, for that matter, the world.

Never a group for reticence, the designers spoke forth briskly on many subjects. Lively, provocative discussions followed, punctuated by the interruptions and disagreements to be expected from a well-informed and articulate group, all emphasizing how fashion has changed from a biannual set of designer-created rules to a deeply involved part of modern life.

Here is the key question and the designers' answers.

"What are the motives for having the midi? Isn't it another gimmick to sell clothes?"

Nora Aponte (Rome designer) "Fashion expresses a psychological need even more than a material one. In a way clothes were getting too practical and not fulfilling their moral functions anymore.

Clodagh O'Kennedy (Irish designer) "Gimmicky fashion dies at birth if the public does not want it. Maxis are a more flattering fashion than the mini for Mrs. Everybody — that's how something that started as a shock idea caught on and is now generally marketed. In my opinion, the midi and the maxi will be adopted much more readily than the mini which, although it got off the ground with the young set was never generally practical and a pretty fashion to span all ages.

Melba Hobson (American designer) "It's not a gimmick. It's an evolutionary as the mini was. The mini having reached its zenith and nowhere else to go and had to be replaced with a feminine comeback in a modernized version.

Rita Perna did the summing up: "The complete fashion approach is all inclusive; from head to toe and from the skin out. Taking it from the top . . . . body is free and unconfined; underpinnings literally thin as skin; small neat head; smoothly coiffed or snugly wrapped; narrow close fitting shoulders and bosom; long skinny sleeves sometimes puffed at shoulder; clutched waistline; inserts, girdles, belts; length is free choice proportioned to fit the look from above the knee down to above the ankle; leg is covered up in dark unbroken line, either booted or shod and stockinged in matching dark color; line is sinewy and fluid; colors are monotone earth shades; materials are knitty tweedy, leathery, furry, heathery.

Signatures of the season: midi coat, the NOW coat, from top of boot to ankle, rain or fur; companion pants, the No. 1 choice with the midi coat; skirt that opens to reveal booted or shod leg; sweater knits, coat, dress or separates; styles with accessories for every mood."

School of Music planned by OSO people

The Oshawa Symphony Orchestra, in a brief to city council this week is announcing the proposed establishment of an Oshawa School of Music.

The new school, enrolment in which will begin in September, would train young members of the OSO, the youth symphony and individuals in the community.

The school, according to Dr. J. N. Lowes, who presented the brief to city council, will provide teachers of string and woodwind instruments, qualified to teach beginners, intermediates and advanced students, the techniques of tonal production, style and musicianship. Master classes by experts on their own instruments will demonstrate a fuller measure of music, yet to be achieved by the student. The Oshawa School of Music will give its students opportunities to hear leading Canadian Composers in person.

Accommodation for the Oshawa School of Music is needed, says Dr. Lowes. Through the co-operation of the Oshawa Recreational Department and the Board of Education, classrooms or studios, suitable for the purpose of teaching can be found. This will open doors to new experiences and stir infinite possibilities for growth and achievement among the younger and older citizens of the community.

Each student will provide his own instrument and pay a tuition fee based on a fee schedule to be worked out. A few talented students could be assisted by scholarships. This tuition fee will be divided between the teacher and the school. The school's administrative costs will be the salaries to the Director of the School, Jacob Groob, and a part-time secretary.

GROOB

In 1969 the Toronto Youth Symphony, conducted by Mr. Groob, triumphed in St Moritz Switzerland over the finest youth orchestras from nine countries, competing in an International Symphony Festival.

Groob studied violin at Toronto Conservatory under Maurice Solway, in New York with Micha Michakoff, concertmeister under Toscanni, in Amsterdam with Professor Back. He studied conducting in the International Academy of Music, Salsburg, Austria and graduated from the Julliard School of Music in New York.

He has appeared as conductor of the London Philharmonic Orchestra, London England. In 1964, he toured Israel as conductor and soloist with Israeli's leading orchestras. He conducted the Toronto Chamber Orchestra performing many public concerts, C.B.C. radio and T.V. series. In addition he appeared as violin soloist and as member of String Trios and Quartets on the C.B.C.

He has gained many credentials as a music educator: For five years he conducted the Inter-Provincial Music Camp in Muskoka. For four years the Ontario Arts Council sent him to organize and conduct the Youth Orchestra in St. Catharines. He has given the series of CBC Music for Young Folk by the Ontario Department of Education. In the summer of 1969 he served as head of the Music Dept. of the University of Vermont.

For 20 years he has performed as member of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and is responsible for introducing several Canadian works for violin and orchestra, including one violin sonata dedicated to him by Canada's distinguished Composer Harry Somers.

"This is the man who will act as a catalyst to develop the musical talent in our young citizens. He will nurture home grown talent for the orchestra so that the Oshawa Symphony will not have to supplement its own ranks with imports from Toronto," said Dr. Lowes.

He added that Oshawa needs its Symphony Orchestra to encourage youngsters to participate in the performing arts, and to bring the incomparable enjoyment of fine music to all.

"We are serious about our growing Oshawa Symphony Orchestra. We have plans for concert programs that involve broader community participation. Education Concerts in conjunction with the Board of Education or Recreation Departments can be developed."

The Board of Directors of the Oshawa Symphony Orchestra also proposes that a Music Makers Programme be introduced during the 1970-71 season into the Public Schools of Oshawa. This will aim to acquaint young children with fine musicians and their instruments through interesting and imaginative programmes.

Two series of Music Makers programmes are suggested for next season:

a) For Kindergarten to Grade III - ages 5-8

b) For Grades IV to Grade VIII - ages 9-14

The following specifications have been indicated by Groob:

Size - one musician with one class (approximately 30 children preferably) or two musicians with two classes (60 children)

Length - Thirty minutes

Physical set up - Classroom where possible with children seated on floor in ¾ circle around the musician.

Flexible Format - (1) Introduction (2) Explanation of Instruments (3) Main part of concert a) theme (10-15 minutes) b) mood c) Rythm (4) Conclusion of Concert - 5 minutes - question period

LAYOFFS

Layoffs are bringing General Motors' production staff down as the summer schedule is on its way. Component production, the truck line and most of the other operations have already closed down for the month-long summer layoff. About 7,500 hourly rated workers are affected and nearly 3,000 others have been left in maintenance, line rearrangement, and inventory taking.

RICHARDS RETURNS

Harold Richards returned to Oshawa from Glendale, California to be the guest speaker at the annual campmeeting at Kingsway College recently. He is currently the speaker on The Voice of Prophecy radio broadcasted through 1,500 radio stations.

SUMMER SCHOOL

Stanley Finbow, area superintendent for the Ontario County Board of Education, says he feels the replacement of grade promotion by subject promotion in some of the area schools, may result in decreased registration at summer school. "When you take away the requirement of repeating an entire year" says Finbow, "you naturally reduce the motivation to attend summer school."

Working Wives

What's it like for a wife who works outside of the home? Is her home life neglected? Do the husband and children mind? Does it make her more or less of a woman? This is the fifth in a series of stories about Oshawa's working wives and mothers.

"I just love it," - Blanche Logan

"I know that each day is going to be a different day" says Mrs. Blanche Logan, "and I'm going to meet different people each day. Different people bring different things into your life."

Blanche is a working wife and mother who has been doing "different" things all her life.

For the last 1½ years she has been dental assistant and receptionist for Dr. Peter J. Riordan. At the same time she is a professional interviewer for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Since she was 18 years old Blanche has been secretary, WREN messenger, photographer's model and "you name it".

But for 16 years she was simply wife, mother and homemaker. Blanche and her husband James have three children, Brad, 17, Lecia Jaye, 14 and Paige, 12.

When the first baby arrived on the scene Blanche stopped working and stayed at home with her growing family. "I was first a wife, then a mother, then a homemaker" says Blanche. "And I don't think there should be any other order. I think in this order it all works out the way it should. Everyone's happy, and this way you have a good rapport with your children."

Blanche was born in Port McNicol, Ontario but grew up in Peterborough. Here she went to high school to grade 11. "Then I joined the Navy" says Blanche. "This was the thing to do in those days, just as today the thing to do is go to university."

While in the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Services she worked in the captain's pay office as a WREN messenger. She worked here from 1944 until 1946 and then went to business college in Peterborough.

After one year there, Blanche took a job as private secretary for David Kerr, manager of the Empress Hotel in Peterborough.

Two years later she worked as a photographer's model and assistant for Bill Thompson in Peterborough; one year later — as a secretary for Ostranders Jewellers in Peterborough; two years later — as a sales clerk at Bassett's Jewellers in Oshawa; two years later — as a dental assistant for Dr. Peter Wilson in Oshawa; and one year later the children started arriving.

"I always thought" says Blanche, "that I was the only one who could take care of our children. Because I'm their mother."

So Blanche stayed home for 16 years while the children grew up. She says she was physically taxed throughout the day — running after the children and so on, but when the evenings came she used her mental energies. "In the evenings," says Blanche, "when the children were tucked into bed, I felt free to do service and church work."

Blanche believes a mother should be with her children when they are young. "The years that I stayed home with our children" says Blanche, "really paid off. You get to know them so well that you almost know what they're thinking'. And in the years when they start to be rebellious — and they do become rebellious whether you have a well adjusted child or not — you're tuned in to why they are this way.

"If you've stayed with them, and worked with them and played with them, the way I think a mother should, you come to know them."

When the children grew older, says Blanche, they began to "think for themselves" and didn't need to depend on her as much. "I found" says Blanche, "that I wasn't using up my physical energies as much any more and I wanted to be doing something. You can only watch so much tv, and you can only ski so much, and you can only curl so much and then it all becomes a bit of a bore."

react?

"In the beginning" says Blanche, "my husband wasn't too happy. He had a negative point of view — he felt everyone was happy up to this point and why change now, why rock the boat.

"So then we had a family-type discussion and I won out.

"Now everyone is well adjusted to it and it's working out beautifully. The children are very

So far in THIS WEEK'S working wives series we've heard only one side of the coin. All the women like their jobs and want to work. But, what about the woman who doesn't want to work? What about thw woman who has to work because she has no other choice? Does this woman exist in Oshawa? Tell us if you do. How does it feel to be forced to work. Whoa, Nell

Sir:

There is no question about the fact that we have progressed a long way since the horse and buggy. For now we have a streamlined, fully equipped, horseless carriage.

This vehicle is modernized to such a degree that you would scarcely recognize it from the original. Bucket seats, wide track tires, and collapsible steering wheels, versus, buckboard seats, wooden wheels, and leather reins.

The similarity between the carriage of yesterday, and the one of today is that they were both made primarily to convey people from point A to point B. One difference that is obvious now is that this can be done in a lot less time — But what's the hurry?

Why is it so important to go from one point to another so quickly? Does it not follow that the faster we travel, the less we see along the way? And could it not be that what we are missing enroute, could prove to be more interesting that what we see when we arrive there?

How pleasant it is to remember back to the days of a slower pace. When 'get me to the church on time', only meant that you started a little earlier. Now, because we have the necessary means to speed, we leave much later and find ourselves having to speed, we leave much later and find ourselves having to hurry to make up for lost time.

One such hurried trip through a maze of motorists and pedestrians alike, could make a person reach for tranquilizers. Only a few have become 'accustomed to the race' and have the ability to relax with one eye on the road and the other on the rear view. The rest must be content to enjoy the 'blurr' of the passing panorama.

With all this rush it should be that we accomplish more, but when you look back into one hectic day, the facts beg to differ. One fast ride, one late appointment, one quick meal, and so to bed. (Exhausted.)

Contrast this with the easy and gentle pace of yesterday. When a trip to town was a thought provoking one, and an excursion in itself.

With 'old Nell' jogging leisurely in front of the buckboard there was plenty of time to enjoy every stand of oaks or clump of sugar maples, and to watch and identify the numerous colorful birds along the way.

To stop and let the neighbors' cows cross the road to pasture and to count them as they passed. Perhaps to help the last lazy one reach the other side.

Time to longer awhile at the wooden bridge and throw a stone into Elmer's Creek and to offer Nell a cool drink from the quiet meandering stream.

To urge Nell on again up the long sloping grade, past Hiram Listwells newly painted barn on the hill and to wave as you go by.

happy. They all have taken on a great deal of responsibility at home and of course, this is a help to them. It helps them become more adult and more mature."

Blanche works for Riordan 32 hours a week, from 9 to 6 p.m., with Wednesdays and weekends off. Every fourth week of each month she conducts a labor force survey for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

"I love it" says Blanche. "I just plain love it.

"Dr. Riordan is one in a million — he's a fine gentleman and very humane. And of course I love my work with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I'd hate to give it up. Then I have my housework — but the house comes last.

"It's funny how your values change. When you're young the house is one of the first things in your mind. And then you get older and it becomes one of the last things."

Before she goes to work in the morning, Blanche does some of the housework. And then she has her day off and the weekends to catch up on any undone housework. "Our daughter" says Blanche, "deserves a lot of credit. She helps with the housework and prepares the meals when she comes home from school. She cooks most of the meals — she bakes, does the washing, ironing, etc."

"All are happy with the responsibilities they have. And my husband is happy because we're all happier.

"I think it's an honorable thing to be able to work. I really do. I like to learn and meet people and see life. I'm thankful I can work — a whole new world has opened up to me."

Duncan paintings go to Gallery

By Paul Bennet, Director

Douglas Duncan, the Dean of Commercial gallery Directors in Canada, died in 1968. His collection of 4,168 works of art was bequeathed to the nation. A large percentage of the works went to the National Gallery, a percentage went to Ontario galleries and a large group went to other galleries across Canada.

The Robert McLaughlin Gallery has received 23 paintings valued at $19,000 from his bequest.

Duncan was an independently wealthy man. He founded and was the director and the owner of the Picture Loan Society located at the corner of Yonge Street and Charles Street, on an upstairs floor, in Toronto. Through this society Duncan helped many struggling artists especially through the depression years. He bought steadily from the artists he believed in — such artists as David Milne, L. L. FitzGerald, Will Ogilvie, Jack Nichols, all benefited from this patronage.

The Robert McLaughlin Gallery has been very fortunate in its bequest. In the 23 paintings are five David Milnes, and five L. L. FitzGeralds. These are going to be on view to the public during the month of August when the gallery will be featuring works from its own permanent collection. The other paintings in the bequest are by Gerald Humen, Scottie Wilson, Dainis Miezajs, Phyllis Janes, Joseph Plaskett, Cecil Troy, George Rackas, Jack Nichols, and W. Roloff Beny.

Opening the July 1 activities at Alexandra Park with a prayer was Rev. Cyril Betts, chaplain to the Mohawks at Tiendinaga reserve near Deseronto. Officiating at the ceremonies on the platform from left are, John Walker, master of ceremonies, William Tredwell, parade chairman, Irenie Harvey, Jack Aldwinckle, Mrs. Aldwinckle, president of the Folk Arts Council and Major Stanley Skea, representing Lieutenant-Colonel N. M. Hall of the Ontario Regiment.

The Harvey Dancers displayed their talents at Alexandra Park during the Dominion Day festivities.

NEW HOURS

The gallery has changed its hours for the summer months. Monday to Saturday it will be open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. and closed during the evenings. This is to accommodate the children's art classes. On Sunday the hours will continue from 12 to 5 p.m.

Last week at the Robert McLaughlin Gallery the Hiawatha Spinners displayed their works. The six Oshawa area women include Mrs. D. Pitka, Mrs. Huth, Hilda Schmidt, Ester Bryant, Inger Scott and Miss D. Abbott.

ALDWINCKLE WINS

Eric Aldwinckle, Toronto artist who painted the memorial arch in O'Neill Collegiate, has been awarded a $500 prize for his design of a commemorative one-dollar coin for British Columbia's centenary. The finance department said more than 2000 designs were considered, more than twice the number received in a similar competition last year for the design of a Manitoba commemorative coin.

OFF TO SUDBURY

A party of 16 young Ukrainians from Oshawa were invited by the Sudbury Folk Arts Council to participate in July 1 celebrations there. The UNYF Salemka Dancers, trained by Orest Salmers and the Salmers Singers, five daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Salmers, were warmly received. Next year Oshawa Folk Arts Council hopes to return the hospitality by inviting a group from Sudbury.

FOUR EXCHANGE

Four Anderson Collegiate students left Whitby Thrusday on a two-week exchange visit in Quebec under the French-English exchange program of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. Debbie Gibbard, Laurie Milner, Marilyn Rice and Britt Lenius will be host to their Quebec partners for two weeks later this month.

HITS COMMUNISTS

Robert Hambly, retiring Rotary president, told the Oshawa club last week that communists working in Oshawa industry and schools are trying to undermine today's society by corrupting its morals. He suggested they be disposed of for all time, to save the nation. Hambly called for "some serious ripping up" and recommended the Communist Party be outlawed. Said Hambly: "These people have a greater hold today than did Adolf Hitler."

Take a close look at that Canadian dime in your pocket. The ship on the tail you have been wondering about is the immortal Bluenose, firmly minted into that coin. The Bluenose is one of the proudest achievements of CANADA. This sleek sail craft defeated every other sail boat on the eastern coast. Two people were involved in this feat, Bill Roue the designer of the craft and Angus Walter who skippered the ship to victory after victory. These two men are in the film, "The Sea Got in your Blood", along with the many others that hear the call of the sea. It's a short flick, only 28 minutes, but it's one of the better ones from the National Film Board, watch for it tonight at 5:00 pm and at 7:00 pm.

The weekly series "This Week" got off to an active if not nervous start when Peter Brouwer talked to his worship the mayor of Oshawa Bruce Mackey. This week, "This Week" will delve into the mind of one of the most controversial of civic leaders Controller Margaret Shaw who must be the outspoken champion of the civic leader business. Now this is one show that I am really looking forward to seeing, today at 6:30 pm.

While the summer months seem to speed by and the only thoughts in the minds of thousands are how fast they can get out of the city to the cottage, events take place on the weekends that the summer traveller misses and regrets. One event that some will miss is the parade this Saturday to promote the Canada Games. So, to make sure you get to see this event, Cablecast 8 will store the event on video tape along with the voices of the sports director Dave Stewart and yours truly; and it will be played Monday at 5:00 and 6:30 pm.

In spite of the heat and the fact that many of the regulars like Madge Crichton have taken the summer off, Travel with Hans continues to spread the scene of world travel. No one gets a bigger kick out of doing this than John Bell our video tape operator who is constantly making sigh like sounds when slides or films of some far of exotic place are flashed on the screen. Next week will be no exception as travel with Hans flashes on the screen and Bell begins to drool.

Recreation in the 70's

key to Oshawa's future personality

Ten to 15 years from this date the population of Oshawa will have bulged into the 115 to 120 thousand bracket. The average Oshawanian will have 25 percent more time available for leisure pursuits The emphasis on educaton will no longer be "education to make a living", but will have evolved to an almost complete emphasis on "education for living".

These are the projections for the future based on facts, statistics and research, and these are the foundations in which the Oshawa Recreation Department builds its programming for the future.

For the average person, comprehension of ideas and plans which will be realities in 15 years, is not always possible. But a fact that is already very real to many people, today, is the effect the shortened work week and longer life span is already having on the amount of leisure time available.

Nowhere is it more evident than in the doctor's offices. Day after day more and more 'patients' troop in with aches and ills they never had time to notice or imagine before.

The increase in spare time for growing numbers of citizens is also reflected in the phenomenal increase in sales in the consumer market of things-to-do-to-fill-up-your-spare-time — the incredible take-off in the popularity of land, water and air vehicles, do-it-yourself kits, a continuing and growing interest in up-dating one's own education, knowledge and appreciation of the arts, in a never-ending search for a meaning in life which is an alternative to the 'almighty buck.'

These are facts which are increasingly insistent on receiving their due attention in our society.

A 15-year projection into the future is a picture of the proliferation of these and countless other related problems. The Oshawa Recreation Department faces the awesome task of planning and programming the means, guidance and facilities needed to help the people of this area handle that leisure time.

WHAT IS RECREATION?

One of the most important problems of the Recreation Department today is educating the public as to WHAT, exactly, IS RECREATION? To many people 'recreation' has an image, synonymous with sports, which is unfortunate. The facts could not be further from the truth. Certainly, sports activities for many people are marvelous forms of recreation, but for a great many more the last thing they would want to do is become actively involved in any sport.

For a definition of 'recreation' let's go to a world-wide authority in recreation circles, G. D. Butler. In his book "Introduction to Community Recreation" Butler writes "Recreation is any form of experience or activity in which an individual engages because of choice, personal enjoyment or the satisfaction which it brings directly to him."

And that is about as broad and acceptable to everyone's type of definition as you can get. In essence, and in the vernacular of the day, 'recreation is doing your own thing', 'whatever's your bag'. That is the premise on which the Oshawa Recreation Department plans its programming, assists and guides other existing groups

Structurally, the Oshawa Recreation Department is made up of its director, Wendell Brewster, who also sits on the Recreation Committee, which in turn is made up of members of the Oshawa City Council. Brewster's the guiding hand in the department. From a background wealth of experience, not only in the recreational and social fields, but in the arts as well, he has used an uncanny perceptiveness in knowing what was needed and when, and the procedural know-how and determination needed to bring it about.

On the role a recreation department plays in a community he has suggested that the accepted purposes of a Municipal Government (those of making the community a safe peaceful place to live; providing police and fire services, building bridges and sewers) are most certainly essential to the community. But they are the bare bones structure of living. The actual quality of community living may well be measured by the depth and extent of the leisure-time opportunities available to all.

Today recreation has its place along with health, education, welfare, as one of the essentials in every individual's life and every community's well-being. Much of this philosophy is shared and carried out by his staff, with the added impetus of loyalty, energy and dedication.

SIX AREAS

For each of six defined areas of recreation there is an Assistant Director; these are Aquatics — Jim Smart; Youth and Senior Citizens — Grant Southwell; Administration — Peter Cekuta; Cultural, Social and Adult — Bruce Holdsworth; Sports and Physical — Charles Pell; Area and Community Schools — Graham 'Tim' Nelson.

Spreading out from these departments are the supervisory, office, maintenance, and part-time personnel which in numbers go from 50 employees to the summer high of 230.

Of the six departments Administration is more or less by itself, inasmuch as it is not as closely related to the everyday problems of community recreation program planning.

Peter Cekuta, assistant director of administration, is responsible for establishing and maintaining control of the budget, policies, keeping records, establishing the means by which plans can be implemented, having available a current recreation information service, and making it known that his department has secretarial services available for the use of groups. The internal staff management of the Recreation Department also comes under the eye of Administration. "In Administration, the main problem is keeping control of the budget," says Cekuta, then adds with a small smile, "The money is not always available to put certain plans in operation."

IDEA-POPPING SESSIONS

During the course of a week Director Brewster and his six senior staff members have at least one, usually two, staff meetings, which are free-wheeling, problem discussing, idea-popping, planning and policy type get-togethers. There is also a bi-monthly staff meeting involving senior staff members and supervisors with emphasis on their professional development.

Assistant Director 'Tim' Nelson of the Area and Community Schools Department has the job of fitting the pieces of the recreation puzzle together. Each department head, whether it be sports and physical, youth and senior citizens, cultural, social and adult, or aquatics, has programs he wants looked at, evaluated, and included in the recreation picture. These must be programmed in the most effective way and duplication must be avoided.

"We ALL put the programs together," explained Nelson. "I just sort of tie-up the strings of the packages and get them on their way," He plunged into the chore of explaining what the Community Area Programs were. "They are programs of a recreational base, run primarily in school facilities for children and adults. There are nine community areas in the city and we hope the people will tell us more of what they want. We try to offer a balanced program in each area. And we certainly have no intentions here to take away any of the programs already established.

"The Neighborhood Parks boundaries, for example, will not be changed unless the Parks themselves want them changed. All we want to do is fill in the gaps. We are not primarily a program body. We like to get programs that are wanted underway. Then, if they can go it alone — great! It's always better for a volunteer group to be strong enough to push itself along. We work in cooperation with various groups — like finding the facilities, the places, for them to meet. One group wants a place to have team handball, someone else wants fencing or ballroom dancing, or dog obedience classes. That's the sort of thing we do a lot of."

COMMUNITY PROGRAMS FOR THE WHOLE CITY

From the initial set of progarams for children and adults put into the Lake Vista Senior Public School three years ago, the Community Area Programs have developed to the point where this coming fall, the entire city will be opened up with recreational programs for children and adults at non educational times in the public and high schools. Everything from ballet and art appreciation to judo and fencing, all kinds of team and individual sports, crafts, sewing, weaving, pottery, stamp club, gym, keep fit classes, rifling club — in fact if enough people share an interest the recreation department will try hard to oblige. Each series is 10 weeks in length with three series in the course of the year — fall, winter and spring. One of the most interesting aspects of the plan is the cooperation between the board of education and the recreation department, which is resulting in the opening up of many city schools for activities of the people whose taxes support these schools.

As well as these expanded plans for the fall, there are already in existence a number of community area programs operating in several schools. On a continuing, year-round basis, is the department's aquatic program which provides one of the most up-to-date swimming approaches and instructions offered anywhere in the country. These are available through the Centennial Pool, and the Vanier school pool.

29 PLAY AREAS

In the summer, the recreation picture changes to meet the needs of the community. From the research and evaluated reports compiled in the 1968 summer recreation program the Neighborhood Community Play Area emerged and was implemented in the form of 29 summer play areas in the summer of 1969. These play areas are operated in the mornings only, and are strategically located so that no child should have to travel more than half a mile to reach one. From the research it was evident

College has unique ties to community

Durham College blossomed out of agricultural lands just north of Oshawa only two and a half years ago.

Since then Oshawa has become used to seeing green-jacketed students around, taking night courses at the college, and enrolling their children in the day-time courses.

Since Durham is a community college, it has unique ties to the community, explains Gordon Willey, the president of the college.

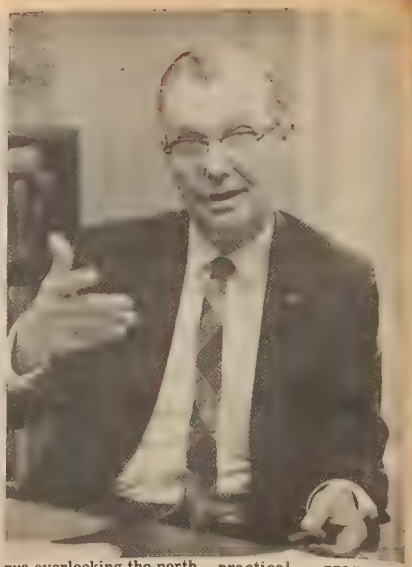
The major role will be to enhance the opportunities for the people of Oshawa and the surrounding area to achieve their vocational and avocational potentials, Dr. Willey says.

"Of equal importance is the supply of well-qualified people graduating from Durham College to meet the needs of business, industry, government and social services to maintain the competitive viability of this region."

Willey notes that the college's board of governors comprises representatives from all major aspects of the community's economy and the programs offered by the school are geared to supply needed technicians, administrators, secretarial and sales people for the community.

ENVIRONMENT

The location and physical plant of Durham College will have an important effect on the development of a particular type of environment in the areas north of Oshawa, the college official points out. Located immediately north of the city limits on Simcoe Street, the college will probably be absorbed by Oshawa in the not-too-distant future, Willey predicts, and can become an oasis of recreation, culture and education in the midst of an expanding urban centre. "The opportunities for parkland, recreation and community activity centres are enlarged and encouraged by the presence of Durham College in an otherwise undeveloped area," he says.



"For those who will grasp the opportunity, Durham College can provide the stimulus and the means to acquire new skills and new knowledge for leisure time or for increased mobility in a time of technological and social change." The manpower retraining program in the area is operated by Durham College.

Durham College can and will attract visitors of distinction who will add to the person-to-person contacts and communications which are vital to our mature growth and awareness of our responsibilities to this community and to society, President Willey says.

Workshops, seminars, special studies at Durham will encourage interest in the problems of this area and promote more dedication by the citizens to service and involvement in local government and community projects. The college can also become a resource centre to help solve specific problems in business and industry as people and facility expertise at the college are developed.

BUILDING PROGRAM

Durham is currently in the midst of a building program. It started out as simply a collection of portable classrooms in September 1967, and the following summer two temporary buildings were constructed. Plans for the permanent campus overlooking the north branch of the Oshawa Creek and the proposed reservoir and park area, were revealed last summer and construction was underway in early fall.

Durham is designed to train young people who wish to receive additional education after high school, but who do not wish to persue the academic route of the university. It is more of a practical, pragmatic, training ground where the students learn the essentials of their chosen field.

Technicians are required as well as engineers, is the philosophy and as the world becomes more mechanized, trained technicians will be increasingly in demand.

Durham College intends to produce them.

Recreation

that youngsters (age 4-8) would be more apt to attend a play area in the morning and are interested in a wide variety of activities. Similarly the older set (age 9-14) was found to be more inclined to come in the afternoon and was interested in a specialized activity of their own choosing.

In the afternoons the 29 neighborhood play areas of the mornings were cut to nine 'activity centers' throughout the city. By operating only nine activity centers in the afternoons it meant that three supervisors were available at each center, and a wider range of specialized activities could be offered.

Another very important undertaking by the Recreation Department this summer is a comprehensive study by two qualified university students, of the needs and wants of the citizens of Oshawa, and the complete existing facilities available.

PHASE 3

By August, Phase 3 of the Civic Auditorium Complex should be ready for use. This magnificent new center will contain a stadium, two soccer-football-rugger fields, complete track and field facilities (a 400 meter track), dressing rooms, night lighting, resulting in one of the finest sports complexes anywhere in Canada.

On a continuing, year round basis is the Recreation Department's support and cooperation with the Neighborhood Parks Association in their programming of team leagues such as hockey, baseball and soccer. The new twin pad arena will relieve some of the pressure and overcrowding at the other three city arenas.

MORE TO COME

To come in the future are more park areas for the enjoyment of adults, outdoor-minimum-facility-swimming-pools, hard surface tennis courts, floodlit diamonds, craft workshops, drop-in centers for the senior citizens and the teens.

The Oshawa Recreation Department is as many faceted as the tastes of the people it serves. But like the proverbial iceberg which shows only one third of its surface above the water, there is much more below the surface of public view. The countless programs, the groups which have been helped over the rough spots, even salvaged from complete loss, the financial assistance given many others allowing them an independent existence, all are proof of the Oshawa Recreation Department's invaluable role in the community. It provides the quality and depth to community life — a key to Oshawa's future personality.

Automated groceries by pushbutton phone

A Kitchener, Ont., businessman has plans for what he claims will be the world's first fully automated grocery merchandising centre, according to the Canadian Grocer.

Roy Bullas says the $5-$7 million centre, where a computer will take housewives' orders by telephone, should be in operation within three years. He estimates it will save the average housewife from five to 10 per cent on her weekly grocery bill.

The centre will issue a catalogue of 10,000 different merchanding items, each with a code number.

The housewife at home will tap out the code numbers of the items she wants on her touch-tone phone (or give them to an operator). A computer in the centre will take the order, assess its size, note the delivery and release a proper-size box onto a conveyor belt at an appropriate time.

The box will move along the belt through the centre under large banks of chutes, which will release ordered items as it passes by. Frozen foods and perishables will go into the box last.

At the end of the line, the computer prints an invoice and drops it into the box, along with new catalogue sheets and lists of items specially priced for that week. The box then passes to a packing section where humans pack and seal the items into cartons for delivery by truck. The housewife signs or pays for the order when it is delivered to her door at the time requested.

One big saving, says Bullas, will be from reduced pilfering.

TRIMMING UP?

Trimming up for summer? Try this. Exercise and massage tone up flabby arm muscles, and the massage is doubly effective if performed with moistened coarse salt. Give the elbows a little extra massage with salt to remove the gray looking, dingy appearance that results from embedded grime. Works well on heels too!

YOUR MARTINI

If you think you are an expert at preparing martinis, next time try putting a pinch of salt in your preparation. You'll be the hit of the town.

"Buy outside help" to assist families

Municipalities will now be able to purchase the services of family counsellors and other experts to counsel and help families receiving municipal social assistance, it was announced by John Yaremko, Minister of Social and Family Services.

Existing Section 17 of the Regulations of the General Welfare Assistance Act lists the wide variety of counselling services which the Municipal Welfare Offices may provide with the assistance of the subsidy under the Act. These services include such things as conselling in respect of family or marital relationships, child care, parent-child relationships, money management, and other social services which may be required by welfare recipients.

"As a result of an amendment to Section 17, which is retroactive to May 1, communities will be able to purchase the services of skilled professionals from outside counselling agencies," Yaremko said.

July 1 was a great day for ice-cream eaters. This one is Richard Dickinson, three.

John and Hans travel in four seasons

By PETER BROUWER
editor

Hans Haagmans and John Kessler, two Oshawa businessmen, have travelled over a million miles by land, sea and air, just to see what travelling is all about. And believe me, by now they ought to know what's where and how to best get to it. There are few outposts on the globe where neither Haagmans nor Kessler have set foot

Haagmans, born in Amsterdam in 1935 had travel in his veins you might say. After high school he attended navigation school in Den Helder, Holland, and upon graduation be became an officer in the Dutch merchant navy with Rotterdam Lloyd. He shipped out on passenger ships and freighters until for Haagmans life at sea appeared not to quite fulfill the travel dream.

Haagmans immigrated to Canada. That was his last bit of travelling for a while, because he ended up working for a textile wholesaler in Toronto. "I swept the floor, tied the loose ends, you name it," he says.

Eventually he ended up in Oshawa, approaching his travel dream from a new corner. He became a travel agent.

Partner Kessler was born in Utrecht in the Netherlands, in 1922. Not too far from Haagmans' home town. His father was an art critic. He joined the air force, serving in Malaya and Indonesia, returning to Holland in 1947. He too picked Canada, but in those days only agrarians were accepted as immigrants. So Kessler got himself a diploma as an agrarian and eventually made it to Canada in 1950.

He, like Haagmans handled "almost every kind of job — you name it." He opened a bookstore in St. Catharines, but closed it on an invitation from KLM Royal Dutch Airlines to work for them. Kessler returned to Europe to work in KLM's commercial department and returned to Canada — and Oshawa in 1958, to manage an existing branch of Four Seasons Travel. It opened here in November 1957.

Kessler and Haagmans were both working for Four Seasons Travel, Hans being transferred to Seven Islands.

In October '62 the two bought out the Oshawa operation of Four Seasons Travel and became 50-50 partners. "And in the next three months — remember the world situation with Cuba — we had about 10 customers." It was a tough start.

Haagmans and Kessler thought they had "a lot of travel folders — two thousand or so."

Today they could lay a path of folders from the office to city hall and back, and probably still not run out. And there's a folder on every journey possible.

Today also, Four Seasons Travel is officially opening its new quarters on King Street, across from the Genosha Hotel Coffeeshop. Says Haagmans, "we needed this new location two years ago. Things have been hectic. Now we have three times as much space."

On display at Four Seasons this week is a $9,000 model, nine feet long with a eight foot wingspan of a jumbo jet. It stops most passersby dead in their tracks.

In the centre of the office the Oshawa Aquarium people are putting up a salt water tropical fish exposition. This, Haagmans says, will be a permanent fixture.

The rest of the new place is desks, more planes, ships, and folders, folders, folders.

"And we're planning some live palm trees and shrubs," says Haagmans.

Both partners travel around the globe about two months out of a year. "We go as often as possible," Haagmans says, so we have a first hand knowledge of the business. Especially when it comes to accommodation, this is important."

"Correct information for the customer," that's the bargain Haagmans and Kessler offer.

About the challenges facing the travel people over the next decade, Haagmans says "a way will be found to fill up the jumbo jets, and to make it attractive to fly for more people." Haagmans and Kessler have both flown the 747 jumbo and commenting on smooth landings, three movies on board and other niceties, Haagmans quips "it makes a DC 8 look like a mickey mouse plane."

Going by boat is "still one of the most beautiful ways to travel," says Haagmans. "It's the only way to really relax, and when you consider that on a trip to Europe for example you get transportation for a week that includes first class hotel accommodation and all meals, it's a great way to go."

But boat trips to Europe are on their way out, Haagmans says. Cruises, such as to the Caribbean ($30 a day per person) are going strong though, and they'll probably stay for some time.

What about getting a passport. "It's much easier now. Things have really improved, although we still advise travellers keep their passport up to date at all times $10 for this purpose every five years is quite reasonable.

Travel formalities such as visas are being made as simple as possible throughout the world, with Poland and Russia still offering some difficulties, Haagmans says. "Very often for Hungary, Tsecho Slovakia visas may be obtained at the border, but these things are subject to change constantly."

And that is why travel agents are avid newspaper readers, says Haagmans. "You've got to know what's happening all the time"

In the Kessler family, Mrs. Kessler is the golfer. "She practically lives on the golf course in summer time," quips her husband. They have two boys and two girls, the oldest boy studying hotel management.

Haagmans married a French Canadian girl (Eldorine) who had applied for a job with Four Seasons and wasn't hired full time for that position. The Haagmans have two children, Daphne and Kim.

Haagmans takes Cable TV viewers on weekly trips through a program on Channel 8.

Queen's Printer has bargains for amateur lawyers

In the third basement of the Macdonald Block in Queen's Park, the Queen's Printer and Publisher's publication centre is bursting with wine boxes.

But instead of containing the spirit of alcohol, the boxes marked "fine Canadian wines" are holding the letter of the law. About 38,000 volumes of Ontario statutes, to be exact.

They have accumulated over the last ten years because, unlike the original contents of the boxes, law books are not a fast-moving consumer product.

In order to deplete the surplus, the Ontario Queen's Printer store at Bay and Grosvenor Streets has put its collection of statute books on sale.

Included in the sale are nine Sessional Statutes and a five-volume set of the Revised Statutes for 1960. Normally priced at $90, the 14 handsomely bound books can now be bought for $9.50.

The Sessional Statutes from 1961 to 1969 now sell for 50 cents per volume, instead of the normal price of $5, while the five-volume Revised Statutes for 1960 sell at $5, instead of $45 per set.

"Since the books have been put on sale, we've experienced a tremendous turnover," said Gary McCracken, supervisor at the publications centre. "In one week alone the store sold five hundred dollars' worth."

Although primarily of importance to lawyers and law students, the law books also have a lot to offer to the consumer or the man in the street.

Act", or the "Artificial Insemination of Cattle Act", but employees might find the "Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act", as amended in 1966, worthwhile literature.

The same year's volume of Sessional Statutes also contains the "Act to Provide for the Protection of Buyers of Consumer Goods and for the Fair Disclosure of Consumer Credit", a statute worth looking into before a major purchase.

Anyone who has ever wondered why movie theatres don't open their doors until 1:30 p.m. Sundays, might want to read the "Lord's Day (Ontario) Act", as published in the Sessional Statutes 1960/1961. This act provides that games, movies, theatre performances and lectures may be held in an Ontario municipality after 1:30 p.m. Sundays, provided the question has been put to and approved by the majority of the registered voters in that municipality.

The 1968 volume contains the "Employment Standards Act", which calls for equal pay for equal work, regardless of the employee's sex. The same act also lays down, with certain exceptions, minimum wages and maximum working hours, i.e., eight hours per day, 48 hours per week.

In fact, every one of the nine volumes of Sessional Statutes now on sale contains laws and amendments which affect the man in the street at some juncture in his daily life.

PIANO BASIC

The importance of the piano as the "basic instrument in music education" was discussed at the annual meeting of the Oshawa and District Branch of the Ontario Registered Music Teachers' Association. Reginald Bedford, presiding examiner for the Royal Conservatory of Music was special guest.

EGG ON FLOOR

Dropped an egg on the floor? But it's not a mess to clean up anymore. Cover the entire egg with salt and pick the whole thing up with a papertowel. Everything will come up in a jiffy.

OSHAWA GENERAL

From a $1,000 building lot to a multi-million dollar operation serving 125,000

Sixty years ago this August, a small group of Oshawa citizens raised $1,000 and purchased a building lot for the hospital their town so badly needed. Between 1910 and 1970 Oshawa and the surrounding area has grown in population and industry beyond the wildest dreams of those public spirited citizens. Today, the hospital they started serves an estimated 125,000 people.

The hospital has grown correspondingly, always striving to keep up with the most modern thinking and technological achievements in medicine. In 1968 because of the pressing need for greatly increased operating space, a campaign for a million and a half dollars was launched, the contribution required from Oshawa and district residents to add a $15,000,000 wing to the General. Thanks to the keen interest and generosity of the people and Business & Industry, the campaign objective was oversubscribed.

In September 1969, the first sod was turned for the 10-storey hospital addition.

Today, despite an unusually long cold winter, construction is proceeding on schedule and should be completed in the fall of 1971.

This will mean a total of 700 beds including 11 coronary beds and a 10-bed intensive care unit with all the newest electronic monitoring equipment. Laboratories, now working under difficulty in four and a half thousand square feet of space will have 18,000 square feet to accommodate their many departments.

Emergency and Outpatients functioning now in cramped quarters will have their space increased three times and will include a suite of examination and treatment rooms where minor surgery can be done. X-ray facilities will be enlarged as well.

A suite of offices will be given to Community Health Services so that many different organizations — the Red Cross, T. B. Association, Mental Health Clinic, V.O.N., Home Care Program, Municipal Public Health Office and Multiphasic Testing Clinic will all have headquarters in the new building.

An extension of this planning for the community as a whole was also manifested in the formation of the Regional Hospital planning area. The Oshawa General joined with Ajax, Pickering, Port Perry, Uxbridge, and Whitby hospitals and regular meetings are held to discuss common problems and where feasible, plan to combine facilities for the good of all.

Hospital planners are constantly searching for means of improved patient care and treatment, and new ideas are as readily incorporated as new equipment. In the past year the Oshawa General has changed over to the metric system of measurement, has initiated the team nursing system and put into practice the Clinical Investigation Unit which shortens the length of time an ambulant patient must stay in hospital by scheduling his tests and diagnostic treatments in advance.

The new automatic rapid processors in the radiographic rooms represent another technological advance, allowing one technician to speedily complete the whole x-ray process. The Coulter Model S. Blood Counter in Haematology has a super-human ability to count blood cells and determine the haemoglobin of a blood sample in a matter of seconds.

As the new building continues to grow, the hospital administration says it is making sure that the best of the new concepts of medicine and hospital operation are also adopted. Personnel is being gradually added to staff to plan the incorporation of new methods and procedures wherever practical. The utmost efficiency is necessary in a hospital which last year treated 64,000 patients and will doubtless serve even more before the end of 1970.

SEE BOOM IN START OF NEW PLANT

An industrial boom in Oshawa could be just around the corner. The first one of what is expected to be a series of major industrial growth announcements was made today.

Fetio Industrial Developments Ltd., which has optioned land adjacent to the Oshawa Harbor says it plans to start production here in 1972 with a revolutionary process for the smelting of iron ore. A multi million dollar industrial complex is planned.

News of the new process, production plans and mining plans in connection with the Oshawa operation were announced jointly by Fetio and Multi-Minerals Ltd.

In a joint statement, the presidents of the two firms also announced a start of the development in Northern Ontario of Mine 6 at Nimegos.

Martin R. Stallaert, president of Fetio said the new smelting process is based on the discovery of Dr. Roy A. Halversen, a U.S. scientist. It permits efficient and economical smelting of iron ores previously regarded as "contaminated" and useless in conventional smelting.

POLLUTION

A major benefit of the Fetio process will be the complete absence of heavy air pollution usually associated with conventional smelting furnaces.

Many existing fields of iron ore in Northern Ontario and Quebec are expected to become exploitable as a result of the new process.

The Fetio firm, according to its president, will deliver a "superior grade" of iron, and in addition, other valuable metals in the ore will be produced in marketable form at no extra cost.

Under the terms of the agreement between Fetio and Multi-Minerals a new public corporation will head the development and Multi-Minerals will provide the tetnaferous magnetite-hepatite minerals to Fetio, while non-magnetic tailings will be returned to Multi-Minerals for further processing.

The complex near the harbor is planned on the "Gifford Property"

Nine municipalities proposed in Paper 3

By Tom Douglas

A two-tier system of regional government consisting of nine area municipalities is outlined in the third discussion paper of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study issued this week.

Five of the nine area municipalities mentioned in the paper are the lakefront municipalities of (Oshawa-East Whitby, Whitby, East Pickering-Ajax-Pickering Village, West Pickering and Bowmanville - Darlington.

The area within the proposed region and north of Three alternatives in new region

Proposed regional development alternatives for the Oshawa area have been narrowed down to three from a total of 10.

This is revealed in the third discussion paper released this week in the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study (OAPADS).

Alternative A for the basic study area consists of a series of urban units located along the shoreline of Lake Ontario, representing a linear lakeshore community interrupted by several north-south greenbelts and bounded on the north by an east-west parkway belt of significant width.

Alternative B is similar to Alternative A except that more growth is concentrated in the centre of the study area, representing a "central city" concept.

Alternative C calls for somewhat slower growth of the lakeshore communities coupled with development of two "northern tier" communities centred approximately on Brougham and Brooklin but separated from the lakeshore communities by a substantial east-west parkway belt.

Major stride forward is mayor's comment

Mayor Bruce Mackey welcomed the proposed establishment in Oshawa of Fetio Industrial Developments Limited, as an extremely significant development, and "a major stride forward" in Oshawa's program of industrial expansion.

"The proposal is most encouraging for those of us on City Council who have always considered that the City of Oshawa is on the verge of an industrial boom, and confirms our belief that Oshawa is the major growth centre of the area," the Mayor said.

Mackey praised the efforts of Harbor Manager, Wilfred A. Gillberry and Industrial Commissioner Robert J. Nicol, who worked for the past year, in close cooperation to bring about Fetio's decision to option land on the Gifford Property as a site for the construction of the metal extraction plant.

Mayor Mackey also said he would do all in his power to ensure the continuing support of City

Thousands demonstrate for Canada Games in Oshawa

Despite the rain, thousands of Oshawa men, women and especially children turned out for the Canada Games demonstration held in a parade and at Memorial Park, Saturday. Terry Kelly Games committee chairman estimated more than 4,000 people took part in the parade. Most of these were amateur athletes from Oshawa and district, representing virtually all sporting groups. In a rousing speech to a packed Memorial Park, Mayor Bruce Mackey said, "This is a great day for city and in particular a great day for amateur sports." The mayor added that the big turnout of demonstrators despite the rain indicated Oshawa's support of amateur sport. Lending a hand to support Oshawa's bid for the summer games were among others NHL player Eddie Shack of the Los Angeles Kings and Brent Hughes of the Philadelphia Flyers and Oshawa's own Don Jackson, world professional champion figure skater. The parade was lead by a runner carrying the Olympic torch. At the end of the ceremony at Memorial Park, Kelly handed to Mayor Mackey the cities' brief which will be presented to the Games officials in Montreal who will decide whether Oshawa's effort to bring the games here will pay off. This could be the start of something big

The announcement on page one of this issue concerning the new smelting industry coming to Oshawa prompts us to take a further look at the harbor commission.

The commission consists of three commissioners, two appointed by the federal government and one by the municipality. They are H.F. Millen, chairman, W.A. Selby and Ralph Jones, municipal representative. The commission staff is headed by Wilfred A. Gillberry, manager.

We must admit that we have felt hitherto somewhat skeptical of the harbor manager's determined efforts in council to obtain the second marsh as a site for future harbor development in the face of extreme opposition from the birdwatchers. It rather seemed at the time to portrend to extreme optimism born of desperation.

However, in the light of this week's announcement it would appear that the commission knew exactly what is was about when it pleaded with council for the transfer of the second marsh for harbor purposes.

While it is early days yet — Fetio has only signed an option with the Commission — we feel that all concerned must ensure that what still needs to be done to obtain this multi-million dollar industry for Oshawa is indeed done and not just talked about.

Here's what's needed:
— seaway depth to be provided by the harbor commissioners.
— a rail spur to be put down to the plant site by the industrial commission.
— water, sewage and hydro services to the edge of the property under option by the city and PUC.

We're not suggesting the taxpayers of Oshawa "give" away these services, but that they will be provided mindful of the business realty taxes, and railcar charges which Fetio and the ancillary industries which Fetio will attract will be paying the city in the years ahead.

The harbor commission deserves the city's wholehearted support to ensure this project is brought to a successful conclusion.

Harbor manager Gillberry is singled out by THIS WEEK for having taken the city up on its suggestion that we cannot leave our industrial sales to the industrial commissioner alone. He needs all the help he can get. In this case he certainly got it from Gillberry.

City manager could stop "slave labor"

We have noticed in the last few weeks that Oshawa city council seems to be emerging from a lengthy period given over almost exclusively to the pastime of contemplating its corporate navel, perhaps in an effort to ascertain from whence it came.

The period of contemplation appears to be over and Oshawa has for the first time dragged its gaze away from its abdomen and has started to look around itself to decide its identity.

Confirmation of this fact is not hard to find. What interests us is not so much that a change in attitude has occurred but more what has been the cause of the occurrence. We feel that the change can be attributed largely to the presence of Mayor Bruce Mackey and several members of council who have established their priorities for the city with a singlemindedness of purpose that is refreshing to behold. And they have worked hard to see them fulfilled.

Now to get to the heart of the matter. The time needed to ensure the rapid and effective implementation of policy is considerable. To take last week as an example. The mayor was engaged in city business for some 60 hours — and perhaps even more — and practising law for whatever time was left over.

It stands to reason that the present gross remuneration the mayor or individual aldermen receive, divided by the number of hours spent on city business, would result in an hourly rate which any union man worth his salt would term politely as slave labor. But okay. Nobody asked these power-mad politicians to serve on council. They volunteered their services to the electorate, they knew the remuneration before they took on the job. They have no legitimate grievance. To a degree, this is true.

However, as anyone who follows the workings of city council will confirm, discussions with which council is confronted are becoming less and less clear-cut by nature of their complexity and the sheer volume of background information which must be digested by aldermen in order to make meaningful decision.

This is taking a great deal of the aldermen's personal time in addition to the regularly scheduled meetings of council and its committees.

The net result is that many able aldermen who are presently serving the city extremely well, are having very strong reservations about standing for election this next December. We are therefore likely to be confronted with a situation next year wherein the most able aldermen are simply going to drop out of municipal life because they can make a great deal more money by giving their undivided attention to their own profession and occupation and in addition see a great deal more of their families than they ever would if they were back on council.

This could result in our ending up next year with a council consisting of retired, semi-retired, or persons from a family group who are not primarily the providers for their group.

Council, for such individuals, is a cheap form of entertainment that boosts their egos and provides a very acceptable supplementary pension. Inherent in the behaviour of these individuals is a desire almost pathological in its intensity, to "stir things up." This not only makes them feel they are earning their keep, but ensures that they are publicly seen to be appearing to earn their keep, which is vitally important to them. (The voting last week on the abolition of the Board of Control bears out our contention.) Their reasoning here being that a little "s... disturbing" is usually good for a mention in the local media. If it is analysed closely, however, it is seldom found to be constructive criticism or comment. It is mostly criticism of someone else's proposals, i.e. these individuals hardly ever come across with viable alternative solutions to the ones they are so quick to condemn. The end result is often less than the best interest of the city would dictate.

What then should be done to ensure that we do not end up with a council consisting exclusively of elderly professional procrastinators and others with time on their hands but without necessarily having the real ability needed to administer the city effectively?

We are not saying that age is an impairment; on the contrary, one elderly member of the present council has shown over and over again a great deal of common sense in constructive contributions to council's deliberations.

It is a very difficult problem, and there is no short answer. Younger members of the community in the 30 to 40 age group who are front runners in their own particular occupations appear not to be interested. The comment most often repeated by those people are "who needs the aggravation of being an alderman" and "why should I deprive myself of seeing my family — if I become an alderman and do the job properly, three or four nights a week will have to be devoted to council business. As a result the children begin to think their parent is that person who only stops by the house at mealtimes."

It is to be hoped that the city manager concept will prevail. If the right man were chosen, he could relieve the mayor and aldermen of a great deal of what appears to be the day-to-day administrative decisions and leave them free to concentrate on policy matters which the city manager will be called on to implement.

Hopefully this will result in fewer hours having to be put in by the aldermen and mayor, thus making it more attractive once again for younger members of the community to run for office.

Well done !

If there's any doubt left in anyone's mind that the promotion of the Canada Games in Oshawa for 1973 was a kyte flying manoeuvre on the part of a few interested politicians with nasty ulterior motives, the turnout Saturday of thousands of enthusiastic Oshawa parents, their children and outstanding athlets, should dispell this "doubt" once and for all.

Well, that was a real happening, that Canada Games turnout on Saturday. And the rain added to the whole thing, didn't it. I've never seen so many people with umbrellas, at least not in this country. Everyone appeared to get into the spirit of the thing, especially the thousands of kids who made this one of the biggest and best parades in Oshawa's history.

Terry Kelly and Mayor Bruce Mackey provided the perfect touch by hoofing it in the parade, just like everyone else. So they got wet, so what . . . .

And city officials too showed up in reasonable numbers, although it would have been nice if they'd all been there. In this regard, Alderman Allan Pilkey asked me to assure THIS WEEK's audience that he wasn't riding in the parade because he's too lazy to walk. "It's my planter's wart," he cried, shaking at me what appeared to be a pretty sore foot.

The hockey fans in my tribe would have preferred Bobby Orr's appearance instead of Shack's but you can't win them all.

SUPREME COURT

While most of you readers were quite unaware of the whole thing, Oshawa supreme court — the court of girl watchers and experts in the female anatomy and what have you — held its first summer session in a room at the Carousel Inn.

The judges, under Mr. Chief Justice Ross Gibson (also known as the alderman) were Vicki Jenkinson of modelling agency fame, Heather Williams, who is the editor of the Oshawa Times' women's department, James Sabyan of Channel 8 Cable and yours truly.

This week's THIS WEEK announces the verdict of the supreme girl watchers court, and I can let you in on one little secret: it's going to be very difficult to decide the winner, come the finals.

Chief Judge Gibson showed his entire "bench" how to direct probing questions at Oshawa's finest. This man Gibson has a great gift for interviewing beauty queens. No wonder some have suggested he take it up as a full-time profession. The choice of seven, which the judges made, was to be seen in Saturday's Canada Games parade, a revelation even to the judges, who did their judging with "street dress" to go by.

It was my first time as a judge, and I still think we should have picked them all. Instead of one Miss Oshawa, why couldn't we just have 13?

GET INVOLVED

Get involved is the slogan of the Oshawa-Whitby United Appeal Campaign this year and pretty soon you'll see "I'm involved", and "We're involved" stickers on jackets and chests of youngsters and even at entrances of Oshawa and Whitby. Why not start thinking about your involvement? It's imperative that the campaign go over big this year. THIS WEEK will keep you up to date and from here on in there should be campaign news each week.

LINE UP

Was it because of the number of Dean Martin fans (or Burt Lancaster fans?) or did the recent DC 8 crash have something to do with the huge turnout for the movie Airport, now showing at the Plaza Theatre? It's not very often an Oshawa theatre has a line-up the way Airport brought out Saturday night. There was more than one block's worth of movie fans lined up on King Street. We were too late to stand in line and we got one of the last 10-or-so seats. The movie was pretty well as expected. I read the book about a year ago. It took too long to tell the story. So does the movie. But it's much better than average.

MOWING

My neighbor has purchased one of these new mini-tractors with lawnmower, and on the weekend I finally got up enough courage to ask him if I could borrow it. It took me an hour to find out just how the clutch worked, and then in the dark, Friday night, I did my hit-and-miss job on the lawn. Turned it into what looked like a cornfield next morning. And to undo a cornfield, I've found, is just as much work as mowing a whole lawn . . . .

WHAT TO TAKE

What will you take on your holiday?

We've been talking ours over for some time, and it looks as if the family is headed for a provincial park, nearby, where daddy can come and visit through the week, while the family lies in the sun. But if there are any more complications about going away in the first place, the whole holiday may be off.

The kids have proposed we take along — besides the pots, pans, dishes, tents, blankets, clothes and food as if that's not enough — the three rabbits, one dog, two cats (one with family and one without), two birds and six bicycles. One helpful friend has suggested I phone a mover and get a summertime "move-to-the-country" discount. I could use a large van. It's either that or bring in someone to look after the livestock while the family's gone.

Which reminds me. Watch this space for a give-away ad for some of the finest little pussy cats in the near future. They're a week old now. And they're thoroughbreds in the true sense of the word, which does not mean they're Persian or Siamese or anything like that but that the father is from Oshawa, and the mother is an immigrant to East Whitby Township, who had her roots in the Niagara Peninsula, from where her mother came, while her father had his roots in Norfolk County.

WEEKLIES SOLD

Another big-time publishing coperation — and most of them are big-time compared to ours — has eaten up yet another three weekly newspapers. This time it was the St. Catharines Standard that bought up three Niagara Peninsula weeklies, the Grimsby Independent, the Beamsville Express and the Vineland Post. You might say the Standard now "controls" the fruit market.

I've a lot of great memories of The Independent. It's one of Canada's oldest, and editing it gave me a great deal of satisfaction for a few years. It's not necessarily evil that the Independent or the other two were sold to a "big operator", but all this business of the big company taking over even the profitable little businesses of the little guys makes me wonder. Are we going to see just a dozen or so executives pull all the communication strings in Canada?

The Canadian Radio and Television Commission in its wisdom has frowned on this type of thing. And it has already taken some concrete steps to prevent it from happening in television and radio. That makes me wonder when this trend of the little newspaper being gobbled up by the big one will be stopped, if indeed it can be stopped.

Meanwhile it will be very interesting to observe the CRTC's next move in October, when cable operators expect to get a clearcut picture of just what's expected of them. Until now it has been a matter of the commission telling the cable operators "show us what you can do in local programming." Some cable operators have come through with first rate efforts, others have a long way to go.

Chronicles of Osh

1. And in the second week of the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy it came to pass that the elders of the land of Osh gathered in the Temple of Osh which stood four-square and then some upon pillars in the square that was called civic by the Oshites.

2. And this was the gathering of elders where some amongst them lowered the boom on others, saying you will be abolished.

3. Now among the elders there were those, including Charles the Physician and the Wayward Beevee, chief ruler of Osh, and Neely and Blondjohn and Murdo the elder, and Rosgib who had labored diligently in the months gone by to rid the land of Osh, yea to deliver it out of the hands of the four elders who sat on the Board, as there were the two women of Osh, Margie and Chris, and the elder Fin and the aforementioned Charles the Physician.

4. And the Charles the Physician had travelled the lengths of the lands of Can to gether unto himself arrows to be used in the bow that would help to bring about the putting asunder of the aforementioned elders, yea even himself.

5. And during the early days of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy, Charles the Physician had not been successful in convincing his fellow elders in sufficient magnitude of the error of their way in that they would not abolish. And thus he had girded his loins and arisen and departed once again from the land of Osh to gether more arrows and he had returned to the land of Osh and he and his henchmen had gathered together in private places with some of the elders of Osh who were known as an unknown quantity in the matter of the abolishment.

6. And thus it came to pass that the aforesaid abolishment was once more brought before the elders of the land of Osh in the second week of the seventh month.

7. And there were a number among the elders who raised hell and cried treason, in a way, yea one of the women of Osh girded her loins and nearly departed hence but didn't, and there were some amongst the elders who named one another names, and there were some who spoke saying, behold, not all the elders of the land of Osh are gathered together here, for Attersl and Russ have departed hence to make merry and to take time off from their labors, and we do not know which arrows these elders would shoot.

8. But Murdo the elder arose and spoke saying, we shall never get this thing done while summer is upon the land of Osh for others among us will make merry and depart hence, resting from our labors.

9. And thus it was that the yeas had it.

10. And a scroll was drawn up to be presented to the Oembee which reigned from the Holy Mountain of Qupee and the elders of which kept a check on the elders of all the lands in the regions of Ont for the High and Mighty John.

11. And the scroll did not state wherewithall the abolishment would be replaced.

12. And the ball was not in the park of the H and M John and there were few among the elders of Osh who doubted that the H and M would look kindly upon the things proposed by most of the elders of the land of Osh.

13. And attached to the scroll would be the words of those elders who wished to retain the foursome of Osh, and who spoke of railroading, which was a term comparing the iron horses of those days unto majority votes of elders, and also attached would be the parchment that would show unto the Oembee the absence of the two elders who were resting from their labors.

14. And also at this same gathering of the elders of Osh in the second week of the seventh month of the year, the people of the land of Osh were promised a new heart of the land of Osh, with new places to hitch camels, and pathways in the land of Osh upon which visions of new towers in the land of Osh for the money changers and even those who paid up when man left never to return.

15. And the promise of a new heart for the land of Osh was called a print that was blue and upon which the builders of the day could bank and make plans.

16. Furthermore did the elders of the land of Osh decree that the gathering of all the livestock and the making merry of the people in the green grass of Alexandra would be allowed in the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy, upon the first day of the week, or as some had it, upon the seventh, depending on when one more what on one's head.

17. And the laws of Moses did not enter into the deliberations of the elders of Osh as they deliberated upon this new day for the phair of Osh.

Protest hippies in park

Sir:

At a meeting of the United Council Veteran's Association, Oshawa, a motion was put forth to the members of the UCVA. voiceing a strong protest to the hippies that are making their home in the Memorial Park in Oshawa.

It is true that the park is there for the use of everyone in the City, but when bands of hoodlums deliberately molest and make a mockery of wreaths laid to honour our fallen comrades who gave their lives for thise so called hippies, we of the United Council of Veterans in Oshawa feel at this time that strong action should be taken to see that this desecration be prevented in the future.

three alternatives

ment alternatives, including the transportation, public services and financial implications of each, were subjected to a systematic evaluation process, leading to the tentative recommendation that three of these alternatives be carried forward as a basis for more detailed study," says the paper.

It adds that the study is by no means cut and dried at this stage but that the three development alternatives are still at a fairly general conceptual level subject to detailing and modification.

There were seven land-use alternatives proposed in Discussion Paper Two released earlier. Three others reflected further thinking and proposed development policies.

The evaluation process all 10 were subjected to were based on the following criteria: accessibility to urban activities, conservation, ultimate growth compatibility, diversity, identity, quality of transportation services, quality of community and social services, access to local and regional government, ease of implementation and servicing flexibility.

The three remaining alternatives "represent in large part a distillation of the best features of the 10 original proposals" the report states.

It adds that the second discussion paper presented a "most probable" population projection for the basic study area of 670,000 in the year 2001. The province announced on May 5 its intention to provide the required development incentive to achieve a population of 750,000 in the basic study area by the year 2000.

"Each of the three alternatives was evaluated on the basis of 670,000 since most of the work had been done by the time of the announcement," the paper states.

"It is important to point out, however, that the 670,000 figure is, for planning purposes, virtually identical to the 760,000 figure . . ."

The report indicates a necessity for the province to evaluate the various alternatives of providing growth incentives and to state their policy on the selected alternative to attract new industry.

"The area enjoys a natural advantage due to a proximity to a large body of water which attracts industry using large quantities for processing," says the study paper.

"Additional incentives could take the form of financial grants for capital expenditures and for new jobs provided during the initial development years of new industry, reduction or elimination of provincial income tax and of capital and place of business tax for the initial three to five years, or grants for servicing industrial land."

the basic study area would comprise four area municipalities as follows(Uxbridge Town - Uxbridge Township-Scott, Port Perry-Reach-Scugog-Cartwright, Beaverton - Cannington - Brock - Thorah and Rama-Mara.

The proposal suggests that Oshawa-East Whitby be given city status, West Pickering, East Pickering - Ajax - Pickering Village, Whitby and Bowmanville - Darlington each be given borough status, each of the other area municipalities containing an existing town or village be given town status, while the remaining area municipality be given township status.

The plan would have the nine municipal areas, within the region drop to eight should the Rama-Mara area become part of another region containing Orillia.

The regional government proposal in the report recommends rejection of a request by Oshawa that consideration be given to amalgamation of Oshawa and Whitby south of a proposed parkway corridor.

"Such a merger would provide a single lower tier administration for the twin centres which are increasingly growing together into a single urban complex," states the report.

"But with the population potential of Whitby and Oshawa combined, there would be created a single lower tier municipality with a population which would ultimately exceed a third of a millin people.

ACCESS

"Therefore, in spite of certain advantages of such a consolidation, the study has reached the conclusion that it would result in the creation of a municipality considerably larger than is desirable if the people are to have good access to their lower tier government."

The report proposes that the head of each area municipality council be given the title of mayor and that each new area municipality council be given the responsibility of choosing the name for the new municipality.

The study suggests that the province bear the costs of the first election for the new system of government, choose the first regional chairman and pay his salary during his first term in office.

Subsequent regional chairmen should be selected by the regional council, either from among their own ranks or from other qualified residents in the area.

A three-year term of office is proposed for all elected positions in the proposed region with a common election date for all elected bodies.

The OAPADS report suggests that the first regional council be given the responsibility of choosing the name for the new regional municipality.

Oshawa tax boost minimal in region

If you are a $20,000-assessed homeowner in south-west Pickering, you'll be paying $32 more in taxes by 1973 and $136 more by 1976.

Urban Whitby residents with similar homes will be paying an extra $16 in 1973 and $72 more by 1976.

Oshawa residents in the same category will see their taxes rise by $19 in 1973, then drop by $9 in 1976.

Such are the statistics contained in the third discussion paper in the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study (OAPADS) released this week.

The paper contains tax projections as part of its discussion on development and regional government alternatives for the area and what these alternatives will mean to the taxpayer.

Using an equalized assessment per homeowner of $20,000 and the tax year 1968 as a basis of comparison, the paper outlines probable tax payments for 1973 and 1976-79 for area municipalities.

Within the urban service area, Southwest Pickering shows $384 as the tax levied on $20,000-assessed homeowners in 1968. This increases by $32 in 1973 and by $136 in 1976 to $520.

Similar calculations for Ajax has the 1968 tax at $400 with an increase of $36 in 1973 and an increase of $96 in 1976 to a level of $496.

Whitby residents' taxes go from $428 to $444 in 1973 to $500 in 1976, an overall increase of $72.

Oshawa residents fare better. Their 1968 tax payment of $480 on a $20,000 assessment rises by $19 in 1973 but drops back by $9 in 1976 for a payment of $490.

Bowmanville residents in similar circumstances will see a 1968 levy of $540 drop by $90 in 1973, only to jump back up to a $16 increase in 1976, presenting them with a tax bill of $556.

In the rural service areas, Bowmanville-Darlington residents will see their 1968 tax level of $252 rise by $60 and then by $126 to $378 in 1976.

Rama and Mara residents will have a constant increase of $36 from $298 to $334 while Pickering-North Whitby householders will have $52 and then $78 piled onto their 1968 tax bill of $304.

Inhabitants of Reach, Scugog and Cartwright townships will see a $22 increase in 1973 drop to $20 by 1976, bringing their 1968 tax level up from $324 ultimately to $344.

The residents of Thorah and Brock and Scott and Uxbridge areas receive a tax gift in that the Thorah-Brock tax levy of $360 will drop by $14 in 1973 and by $16 in 1976 while the Scott-Uxbridge payments decrease from $388 in 1968 to $348 and then to $346 by 1976.

The OAPADS report states that in 1973, the major item contributing to increased regional costs is education which accounts for a 2.7 mills increase over 1968 in the urban service area.

Based on the $20,000 assessment figure used above, this amounts to a $54 increase. This is partially offset by increased per capita and density grants.

"Of this 2.7 mills increase, 1.2 mills were accounted for in the 1969 tax levy when the responsibility for school boards was assumed by the county and educational service levels were standardized," states the discussion paper.

"The additional increase is due mainly to the proportional swing of students to the secondary from the elementary school level and the increased capital and operating expenditures associated with secondary school education."

The report adds that county roads expenditure account for 2.6 mills of the regional levy. It stresses, however, that regardless of whether a regional government is formed in the area, many of the above costs will be incurred and an increase in the mill rate as forecast will take place.

The study adds that the significant increase in taxes in Southwest Pickering is caused by the inclusion in the projection of the implementation of the full urban service level.

"By so doing, the local mill rate is increased by five mills or $100 in annual homeowner tax," it states. "The assumed increases in service for fire protection, garbage collection and recreational facilities account for about 80 per cent of the increase."

The discussion paper indicates that in rural Bowmanville-Darlington, the major increase in local expenditure occurs on local roads.

On the other hand, taxation in the urban portion of Bowmanville-Darlington drops significantly in 1973 because the area is currently subsidizing the United County and no increase in level of service is assumed by 1973.

The report states that taxation in the Rural Service Areas also increases to 1973 due to additional education expenditures.

"This is offset by additional grants and the additional assessments of Oshawa and Bowmanville over which regional costs are spread," it adds.

Up, up 200 feet

A new landmark will be making its impressive debut on the growing Oshawa skyline soon.

It's a 200 foot red brick smokestack being built as part of the Oshawa General Hospital expansion program.

Brickwork for the structure already is being laid and within a few weeks, the stack will be the highest structure in Oshawa.

The hospital board's building sub-committee is still investigating the question of what sort of identifiation sign, if any, to place on the chimney. Some signs are too heavy and others couldn't withstand the high winds at that height.

SORRY, WALTER

Jo Aldwinckle must have had stars in her eyes when she thought she saw Alderman Gordon Attersley present a souvenir tray to Liberace following his dazzling performance in the Civic Auditorium. It was really Walter Branch who, as chairman of the board of directors, made the presentation to the star. Sorry, Walter. Wake up, Josie.

German students perform folk music at Loreley

By Jo Aldwinckle

A busload of students breezed into town last week, bringing with them the charm and romance of old Germany. They were members of the Folk Ensemble "Rega" from Erlangen (near Nurnberg) who are on a tour of Ontario and Quebec.

At Club Loreley they sang and danced with youthful vigor and professional showmanship to an appreciative audience.

The fresh-complexioned girls, without a trace of make-up, wore embroidered shawls and aprons over their peasant bodices and dirndl skirts. Bonnets edged with white ruffles framed their smiling faces.

The boys wore red or black waist-coats with embroidery on the pockets and neckties. Their round caps were bound with fur and their high black boots gleamed. They were all a picture of health and exuberance.

Their program was authentic. They danced the Carousel which can be traced back to 1755, and the Allemande, a fisherman's dance in which the waving of handkerchiefs had its origin in the flag signalling between ships.

The Thuringian Suite incorporated jumps and leaps by the boys and the dance form is attributed to Johann Sebastian Bach. The boys demonstrated their agility in the Siebensprung (first mentioned in writing in 1605) by performing handstands and cartwheels.

They also danced the Waterwheel, an ancient ritual, forming spokes as they rotated. Their Rupeltanz was an ingenious mock fight. Their Sword Dance, stemming from the Middle Ages and symbolizing death and eternity was dramatized by the beat of drums.

The Cobblers' Dance and the Clog Dance were reminiscent of the old crafts and callings. In the first the gestures, winding, slitching, threading and hammering were typical of the shoemaker and in the second the girls danced in wooden shoes and like the fishermen's wives who once wore them, they took them in hand to clap out the rhythm.

Most surprising was the Pomeranian Krakoviak a combination of German and Slavic features, over two hundred years old. Nobody actually knows the origin of the eance. Some believe that Poles who used to come to Pomerania at the end of summer to help with the harvest, brought Ukrainian dance figures with them. The Cossack

Spiers-Bevan

Centennial United Church was the setting for the recent marriage of Miss Nancy Marie Bevan and Mr. James W. M. Spiers. The Rev. G. J. Minielly officiated, the organist was Mr. R. Cotton and the soloist was Mr. F. Densham.

Given in marriage by her father, Mr. W. R. Bevan, the bride wore a formal white gown of silk organza fashioned in an empire line. The bodice, designed with Victorian sleeves was accented with white daisies and the back of the gown gathered just below the shoulders to form a full train. Her headpiece, a band of daisy petals, held a silk two-tier shoulder length veil and a full length veil. She carried a bouquet of purple mums and orchids.

The maid of honour was Miss Pam Bevan, sister of the bride and the other attendants were Miss Kathi Gilmore, Miss Ann Louise Ross, Mrs. R. Thackeray and Miss June Taylor.

The best man was Mr. Robert Spiers, brother of the groom and the ushers were Mr. W. Spiers, a brother of the groom, Mr. M. Plancke, Mr. Al Fice and Mr. M. Densham.

Series on drugs starts

Pharmacists Peter Francis and John Steffen of Eastview Pharmacy, 573 King St. East, Oshawa, are publishing a series of 13 different articles about Drug Abuse, the first of which appears in this week's edition.

"Drug Abuse is becoming so serious a problem," they say, "that we feel it is our duty as pharmacists, the drug and medicine dispenser of the Health Team, to explain to the public and particularly to the youth of our city, how dangerous it is to experiment with them in search of unusual experiences and psychedelic thrills that can cause lasting harm.

While the information in these messages is authentic, they are written particularly to give the younger generation information that should influence them to realize how dangerous can be the after-effects of smoking "pot", taking a "trip" with LSD, experimenting with "goof balls" and other illicet barbituarates. And finally they discuss the truly addictive narcotics, especially Heroin.

"It is reported that from grammar school up, even children are experimenting with these dangerous drugs, influenced by their older friends, who in turn are urged by the drug "pushers" to advance to the more addictive narcotics.

"We suggest that you save each of these 13 Drug Abuse messages and make certain that every member of your family reads them."

dance enjoys great popularity at all the harvest festivals in Pomerania and good Cossack dancers are welcome guests everywhere.

There was singing, too with some sweet solo voices. We had a medley of Pomeranian Folk Songs and a selection of old German airs many of which have their counterparts in English.

The musical backbone was provided by a student orchestra of three accordions, two guitars, a flute and a double bass. Such delightful entertainment should have been held in a larger hall for many more to enjoy.

President Otto Heller explained: "We didn't know for sure whether we could persuade them to stop in Oshawa until it was too late to make other arrangements. They have a very tight schedule and must be on their way by 5 a.m."

"What do you think of Canada?" I asked one of the girls.

"It looks like a nice place from the bus" she replied.

I hope they had a little time for sightseeing in Ottawa.

"Woodstock"- turning point to the seventies?

By Jim Walker

Sitting on a hillside in the rain with 400,000 other people and listening to a continuous outpouring of sad and staccato acid rock may not be everyone's idea of history in the making. But phenomenon or disaster, painful pilgrimage or ecstatic adventure, Woodstock — and what happened there — has become not only the joyous symbol of a new generation, but the keystone to a new decade.

As with many other moments of history, many of us did not hear about Woodstock until it was all over. Vague reports talked of a million children stranded on a stretch of upstate New York farmland, drawn there by the music of their generation and the companionship of their own kind. There was no food and little water, said the news bulletins. Torrential rains and bad drug trips, all duly reported to the world outside, conjured up visions of a cross between the Deluge and the hospital scene from "All Quiet on the Western Front."

RECORDED

Each report had an element of truth. But it was also a fact that the incredible army of young people who had trekked in from every corner of the U.S. and Canada — and 400,000 is but a conservative estimate — were not only staying put, but openly and quite obviously, were having the most glorious, carefree and momentous time of their lives.

True to a generation brought up on McLuhan and mass media, the festival that turned into a sociological phenomenon was being recorded at the time it actually happened by a group of young filmmakers. Twenty young cameramen, working under the supervision of director Michael Wadleigh, 28, launched themselves into the thick of the festivities and emerged three days later with headaches, black eyes, nine cases of flue, two broken lenses and 120 hours of film.

The result may well prove to be not only a highly entertaining motion picture, but a shattering and fascinating contemporary document on our life and time. "Woodstock," which Bob Maurice produced, does not attempt to explain or analyze the festival; it simply presents what happened there. The public, like the youngsters who participated at the actual event, are left to come to their own conclusions.

The focus of both film and festival is music — an impressive array of talent for "three days of peace, music and love."

The performers included Joe Cocker, Arlo Guthrie, Joan Baez, John Sebastian, Country Joe and The Fish, Richie Havens, Santana, Ten Years After, Jimi Hendrix, Sly & The Family Stone, and Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young. The Who were there, too, along with The Jefferson Airplane, Bert Sommer and even a nostalgic touch of 'fifties rock with the Sha-Na-Na and their startling, gold lame zoot suits. Flown in by helicopter from Liberty, N.Y., 10 miles away, they had to struggle through ankle-deep mud and perform to the constant risk of electrocution from the lightning bolts that pinpointed the area at regular intervals.

UNITY

In spite of this, or perhaps because of it, everyone played hard, loud and well, resulting in an incredible feeling of unity between the crowd and the stage that comes through as a strong and vibrant highlight of the film. Alone and strangely vulnerable under the bare spotlights, often drenched to the skin, the young musicians still seemed genuinely delighted to be a part of what was happening.

In front of them, as far

Woodstock opening here

"Woodstock," the Warner Bros. motion picture of the young generation's three-day celebration of love, peace and music, will open this Friday at the Marks Theatre.

Directed by Michael Wadleigh and produced by Bob Maurice, the Technicolor film captures all the mud, joy and excitement that enveloped half a million young people in an unforgettable experience. Some 20 camera crews joined in filming the event that has become part of the nation's vocabulary.

Among the performers in "Woodstock" are Joan Baez, Arlo Guthrie, Joe Cocker, Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young. Ten Years After, Sly & The Family Stone, John Sebastian, Country Joe and The Fish, Jimi Hendrix, Richie Havens and Santana.

The night shift

Tonight and Thursday, the New Marks will be showing The Great Bank Robbery and The Rainpeople. And beginning Friday, that much-talked-about, much-raved-about and just about much everything else movie, Woodstock (with a cast of 400,000 and more) will start.

For all those past the age of rock festivals who have heard the name and are curious as to what it's all about, Woodstock is the name of a small town in New York State, and the site of a peace, love, and music filibuster that lasted 4 days through muddy rainy weather and unimaginable difficulties. No food, no sanitation facilities — just people. (And no riots or demonstrations.)

Held over indefinitely, Airport will be shown at the Plaza Theatre. Based on Arthur Hailey's best-seller, and starring Burt Lancaster, Dean Martin and Jacqueline Bissett, it's bound to be a good night's entertainment. It's not restricted, nor is it adult entertainment."

Starting tonight and running over the weekend, Myra Breckenridge, a very much restricted movie will be shown at the Odeon. Raquel Welch and May West, two sex symbols representing two different generations ought to present interesting opposites.

At the Regent, Beyond the Valley of the Dolls, will be held over for the second week. And for all the casual come-as-you-are types, the Oshawa Drive-In is now playing the Battle of Britain, starring Michael Caine and Buona Sera Mrs. Campbell with Gina Lollobrigida.

Elvis Presley (remember him?) and Martha Hyer star in the Chains of Habit, at the Teepee Drive-in.

Out there on Highway 2 the Bay Ridges Drive-In is showing The Executioners along with The Land Raiders, two movies which sound pretty lively.

HOTELS

The hotels are offering their usual dish of good entertainment this week.

Listen to down-to-earth, homespun country and western at the Lancaster Hotel, starring the Jack Kingston Trio. If you have a sweet-tooth enjoy the Peppermint Candy Girls, at Jim's Stage Door in the Hotel Whitby.

Another popular night-spot in Whitby, the Spruce Villa Hotel is featuring rock and roll with the John and Judy Quartet from Vancouver, for one week only . . . so hurry and catch the show.

Held over for another big week, 'The One and Only Robbie Lane' is presented at the Genosha Hotel.

Misty Dawn, an exotic dancer to warm you up, and The Cool Ones to guess what — cool you off, are featured this week in the Coronet Room at the Cadillac Hotel.

In the Gold Rush Room at the Central Hotel, the Mark Helm people (that's Mark, not Matt) will be doing their stuff for you this weekend.

A new group, the Journeymen Duo, entertain nightly at the Carousel in Oshawa.

as the eye could see, was an equally happy mass of humanity. Bivouacked on grassy knolls and on the margins of mosquito-infested marshes, huddled together against the rain which was to fall, on and off, for almost 15 hours, the long-haired children of the love generation shared tepid cigarettes, beat time to the music and scrubbed each other's backs under the teeming skies. Flying high on the simple enjoyment of being together, they turned everything into a mass wave of warmth and good vibrations.

As the film reaches audiences across the country, many questions again will be raised and left unanswered. What was the magnetic attraction that brought so many young people together in one small Catskills town? Was it the music? Did all 400,000 travel for miles just to sit in the rain and listen to the hard, intense blues music of their favorite groups?

THANK YOU

The Canada Games Parade Committee wish to extend their thanks on behalf of all the citizens of Oshawa to the Individuals, Organizations, Groups and Bands who participated in one of the most Spirited, Colourful and truly Representative Parades ever held in the City of Oshawa.

The fact that we have the finest City in Canada and the finest citizens in Canada was never more evident than on Saturday, July 11th, 1970--the day we showed the country we want--and deserve--the Canada Games in 1973.

Sincerely,
Jim Doswell,
Chairman, Canada Games Parade Committee.

Thank you, one and all!

Band concert for "Our Mr. Sam"

By Jo Aldwinckle

Perhaps, because it had a message to convey, the Oshawa Civic Band gave that little bit extra that makes a concert outstanding, at the McLaughlin bandshell, Thursday night.

Stewart Alger acted as master of ceremonies and the whole show was recorded for Colonel R. S. McLaughlin who is recuperating after surgery.

The musical message was inferred. "Welcome home, Mr. Sam. You had us all worried for a while but we knew that given half a chance, you'd win through. Here's to your renewed good health."

In their selections from opera to Broadway, conducted by Captain George Quick, the band gave a spirited performance and the solo horns and trombone spoke eloquently.

Accompanied at the piano by Sharon Perkins, Elsie Drygala's soprano voice rang clear and true over the park as she sang The Nova Scotia Song and Roses of Picardy, especially for Mr. McLaughlin. Later, she sang the beautiful Let Peace Begin with Me and Try to Remember.

It fell to Monsignor Paul Dwyer to express what everyone in the large audience was thinking. "If any one man has demonstrated his neighborliness, it is our Mr. Sam," he said. "His father brought him to Oshawa when he was a little boy. He grew up here. He loves Oshawa and has put himself into it."

"His heart is so big, there is no measuring of it."

The monsignor referred to Mr. McLaughlin's many benefactions to Oshawa and to Canada, especially to his medical foundation, designed to benefit all mankind.

"The citizens of Oshawa want him to know their regard, their affection and their hopes and prayers that he will enjoy many years of health and contentment of body and spirit."

Pipers Nancy and Charlene Ferguson of the Kinsmen Ladies' Pipe Band, piped the monsignor to the podium.

During intermission, the funds derived from the Miles for Millions walk were presented to representatives of the participating agencies.

The Reverend Fred Swann introduced dignitaries, including Alderman James Potticary, representing the mayor and Edward Broadbent M.P.; representatives of the walkers who presented the cheques to the recipients.

Over $100,000 was raised by 10,000 walkers, 3500 of whom completed the 32 miles from Whitby to Bowmanville and back.

As one speaker said: "The impossible can happen."

It's ESP at the art gallery

By Paul Bennett
Director

During the month of July the Robert McLaughlin Gallery will be displaying two exhibitions by Canadian print makers. The first, prepared by the National Gallery, is ESP — meaning Esler and Pachter.

ESP, the short form for extrasensory perception, also stands for the names Esler, Pachter. Perhaps this is no coincidence, since this exhibition brings together the work of two contemporary Canadian printmakers of completely different backgrounds and expression who in this show complement one another in a dynamic way. They work in contrasting media and styles, yet on several counts approach the same level of nuance and sensibility.

Esler is primarily an etcher, Pachter a lithographer. The etcher is dealing with a relief process where incised lines are bitten through a ground by acid, and paper is forced into these inked lines through pressure from a press. The lithographer works on a flat surface, usually a grained limestone or metal plate, drawing his image with grease pencils and washes, rolling ink on to the grease areas, and taking a direct impression on paper from a press with scraper-bar pressure. For Esler, the etching or intaglio plate is a celebration of the medium. It is a slow, developmental process, tempered by time, patience and experimentation. For Pachter, the lithograph is a vehicle for the message. It is fast, direct and spontaneous. The time is spent on drawing the image rather than preparing the surface of a plate.

The second exhibition is a show of 40 prints and drawings prepared by the Merton Gallery, Toronto. This exhibition will be discussed in this column next week. Summer Hours are Monday to Saturday, 10 am to 5 pm, and Sunday 12 to 5 pm.

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

In what must have been one of the most unusual marathon taping sessions the studio walls have witnessed, Cable Cast 8 accomplished the seemingly impossible when seven beautious — and good looking too — girls descended on the scene.

All seven of these well endowed and active young ladies are contestants in the Miss Oshawa Beauty Contest that will be held Thursday July 23 at the Oshawa Fiar.

Now, normally the production crew are pretty cool about any show to be taped. With the almost bored look of people who have seen just about everything in life the boys do their thing with a calm mechanicalism except for this one time.

Eyes boogled, tongues draped to the floor, and sly winks were passed back and forth as the seven contestants were interviewed for a short three minutes.

But what really upset the usually calm and efficient crew was the second taping when seven bikinis pranced out under the lights. The camera somehow went out of focus and the video tape recorder blew a fuse.

After getting all systems going again, the final scene was immortalized on the tape but only after the crew had several nervous breakdowns.

"How," said the control operator, "do you expect me to tape a council meeting after this."

All seven girls will be seen during the News, Sports, and Weather starting tonight, but don't get overwrought, we're only going to show them one at a time till all seven have been exposed.

Very shortly some feature films will be coming to us, so watch your schedule to see when.

Industrial boom seen in Fetio iron smelting deal phur, manganese and other elements have been considered useless in iron making. Although this type of iron ore has been discovered in huge proportions in Canada, principally in Northern Ontario and Quebec, there is but a limited exploitation of this natural resource.

The economic advantage of the new process, according to Stallaert, lies in the fact that a superior grade of iron is produced at a cost comparable to that of conventional processes. In addition, he said, other valuable metals in the ore are produced in marketable forms for little or no additional cost, thus increasing earning power of the smelting operation.

WHY OSHAWA?

Stallaert said Oshawa was chosen for the initial operation for "obvious reasons". He listed these:

— It is serviced by adequate road, rail, air and water transportation.

— There is a large skilled and semi-skilled labor reservoir.

— It is relatively close to all basic raw materials and Oshawa is also strategically located in the center of one of the world's heaviest manufacturing areas. Within a radius of 500 miles of this growing seaway port, close to 50 percent of this continent's gross national product in manufactured goods is produced.

Initial operation will be based on a 100 ton per day furnace capacity which will be used largely to regulate all production phases of the process and test a wide variety of ores.

Stallaert said every effort will be made to utilize the iron, steel, other metals and by-products in forms which will assure the highest possible earnings, and will make Oshawa "the metallurgical center for the metals of the future".

High grade pig iron now sells for about $60 a ton. Because of the unique toughness of iron produced from the new process and the possibility of adding a small amount of titanium, it can be cast directly from the furnace into open top moulds producing the new flat-sided ball-mill balls, which sell for about $175 per ton. These balls will out-wear more costly alloy balls now in use, Stallaert said.

In addition to pig iron, he said his firm plans to produce steel ingots, foundry iron and alloys of iron and steel — "all of which can be produced more economically to customer specifications".

While North American and world steel manufacturing facilities are working below maximum capacity, there is an assured market for the production from the Oshawa operation, the company president forecast. He said plans call for production to be up to 600 tons a day within four years.

Titanium made available in larger volume at lower prices will assist in new and improved alloys for all sorts of old products that can be offered to almost every industry, he said. The United States today purchases large amounts of sponge titanium from Russia to meet its quota for space and aviation programs.

The lighter weight, corrosion resistance, greater strength and easier handling of titanium steel will produce rails that weare 35 per cent longer, automobile frames that are lighter, stronger and last longer, steel sheets to improve corrosion and to make building panels for higher sky scrapers that will out-last aluminum; higher stress steel forms that will permit lighter design of structural supports.

NO POLLUTION?

Because the smelting furnace on the Gifford property will be operated into a closed-up circuit which permits the recovery of marketable by-products heretofore wasted to atmosphere, the operation will be air pollution-free, Stallaert said. Furnace gases are filtered and re-used for industrial purposes, and titanium dioxide is produced in a purity yet unknown, he added.

New furnace design substantially reduces the cost of smelting ore and a 600 ton size furnace will compete most favorable with larger furnaces (up to 1500 tons) because of a more rapid heating time which reduces the coke and limestone requirement thereby providing more ore turnover per hour, according to the Fetio president.

INITIAL INVESTMENT

The initial investment in Oshawa, which will be approximately $10 million, will provide work for about 250 people during the 18 month construction period, and a permanent staff of 200 will be required by July 1972 when operations will start.

A Canadian controlled public corporation is being formed to operate the industrial complex here, Stallaert said.

Constable Robert James Hobbs, son of Mrs. Jessie Cowan, 85 Brock Street West, has been appointed to the Welland Detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police. Hobbs recently graduated from the OPP College in Toronto.

Council to finalize the Fetio deal and the Mayor reiterated the fact that the City of Oshawa has the financial capability to support this development and similar industrial and commercial projects.

"City Council has shown in the past, and is displaying now, with Fetio, its willingness to cooperate with those developments that participate in our economic expansion. This to me," said Mayor Mackey, "is the City's policy for progress."

MURDER TRIAL

Randy Clay Dawson, 15, of Darlington Boulevard, Darlington Township, has been committed to trial for non-capital murder in the next Supreme Court sitting. He appeared in a preliminary hearing last week. Dawson is charged in connection with the death of Gail Ruth Mohns, 19, Darlington Township, who was found strangled in an upstairs bedroom of her home on April 26.

Freezer bags keep fruit, vegetables foreverfresh

With warm weather now with us, mouth-watering, fresh in-season vegetables and fruits are beginning to adorn the produce counters.

According to the Ontario Food Council, among home-grown goods on the market are asparagus, beets, spinach, sweet cherries and strawberries.

A handy way for the homemaker to keep them fresh for summer salads is preservation of them in freezer bags.

Excellent freezer bags for preserving are made of flexible, moisture-resistant polyethylene. The bags are sealed with metal twist-ties, enclosed in each package.

To pack asparagus, just wash the stalks, remove the scales, scald and boil for one minute, chill, drain, place in plastic bags and pop into freezer.

To store spinach, wash, trim, scald and boil for one minute, chill, drain and package.

Beets must be topped, washed, scaled and cooked until tender then peeled, diced, chilled and packaged.

The method for storing sweet cherries is by washing, chilling and pitting. Then sprinkle one cup of sugar with five cups of the fruit and package and store as above. The same process is used for sour cherries which arrive in July.

Strawberries should be washed in ice water, stemmed and sliced or left whole according to taste. Packing is the same as it is for cherries.

The bags are sold in grocery stores, hardware stores and the major chain stores.

A rose for the busdriver. Here's Mary Taft, secretary to administrator A. E. Flyn of the Oshawa Shopping Centre, pinning a rose on the driver of the first Algar Coach Lines bus to reach Oshawa. Algar has commenced a six-day a week bus line service, three times a day from the Lindsay area to Oshawa. Passengers (and the driver) of the first bus were greeted with roses by the shopping centre merchants executive.

Cleaning care means longer wear

With each change in the weather comes a stock-taking of wardrobes.

The warm months with their humidity are no exception and a little extra care of clothes will help make women chic and fresh in spite of the temperature.

According to W. J. Burdock, a dry cleaning specialist, dry cleaners are professionals in their work, particularly in the cleaning and finishing of any of the garments available on the market today.

He added, however, that coin-operated dry cleaning machines can do an efficient and economical job on such things as children's wear and some of the permanent press garments — also on such things as duffle coats and sleeping bags.

Burdock had other tips as well on the care of clothes.

Included in regular routine should be brushing of clothes, use of wooden hangers that are neither too small or too large and drying of rain-soaked garments in a cool, well-ventilated place before hanging in the closet.

Dry cleaning of garments should be done regularly as grease, grit and dust rob them of appearance and life.

The cleaner should be told the staining substance for successful stain removal and be shown the exact stained area.

Among the no-nos are pressing a stained garment as heat will set the stain and make it impossible to remove.

Well, he just said; "If your dog-team is up to it, I'd strongly suggest that you mush right down to MURRAY JOHNSTON'S MENS AND BOYS SHOP in Downtown Oshawa and get in on their GREAT HALF YEARLY SALE OF FINE CLOTHING AND SUMMER WEAR" But he forgot to tell the poor guy that the SALE STARTS on Thursday, 16th July and now it's doubtful if he can make it. Nature Corner

The other day we were discussing everything in general over a cold beer and the talk gravitated to pollution, conservation, nature study and how the authorities had better do something before we ruin our environment.

Well, an elderly friend from South of the border who was present, opinioned as to how those nature lovers and naturalists were not quite as idealistic as we had hitherto imagined.

"How come"? we asked.

"Well, take bird watchers as an example. What do you-all suppose motivates them to race around the countryside with high powered binoculars and more especially, just what are they expecting to see these feathered creaturs do if they are fortunate enough to spot a rare species?"

"Well", we replied, "to tell the truth, we hadn't really thought about it".

"Ah", said our Southern friend, "not many people have, but the fact is, bird watchers are a pretty funky breed — they are voyeurs — you know, 'peeping Toms'. That's their hang-up".

"Come on", we said, "don't insult our intelligence; are you expecting us to believe that bird watchers get their jollies from watching birds reproducing — ridiculous".

"Not so", said our friend, "talk with a really keen bird-watcher and words like plumage, preening, courtship, nesting, eggs, etc. creep into the conversation. With what activity would you associate these words?"

"To put it politely — breeding"

Put that way, he had a point.

We invited him to continue (he'd put the bird-watching thing in an entirely different light).

"Yes" he said, "now take the average bird-watcher. He may specialize in one particular species of bird. For example. the 'tit' family. There are of course, all kinds of tits, i.e. common tits (as their name indicates, they are fairly common). Then there are blue tits (they can be seen in abundance above the Arctic Circle). Also, there are of course the small tits, common to all parts of the country, and who tend to conceal themselves well and are therefore rather hard to find.

"However, any bird-watcher who is really interested in tits will of course be on the lookout for the great tit, the largest and most prominent of the whole species."

By this time the atmosphere around the table was quite intense. We hung on our friend's every word. "Any tit watcher" he said "will tell you that one of the most exciting things that can happen to him is after groping his way around the countryside all morning, he suddenly spies a pair of 'great' tits in the shrubbery."

Frankly, the assembled company was speechless at this revelation, and we began to feel rather sorry for those birds the bird watchers watch.

So in future, all you ornithologists, have some consideration for the birds. Remember it is not considered polite to stare.

POLICE CONTRACT

A three-man arbitration board under Judge A. R. Wilmott will decide the fate of the contract this year with Oshawa's 120 police officers. The board has up to 60 days to reach a decision binding on both sides. Other board members include Cliff Pilkey, MPP.

Carnival adds 7

Outdoor theatre, log sawing, a fiddlers' contest, horseshoe throwing, a flower show, a young people's horse show and an exhibition by local artists are the "what's new" of the fifth annual Whitby County Town Carnival.

The carnival kicks off August 1, complete with a whole group of residents of Longueil, Quebec, Whitby's twin community.

Even "body painting events" are listed among what's new this year, along with a continuous exhibition of scouting in action by the boy scouts.

Again this year, the Streamline Rover Trailer Club will use the carnival as a venue of their annual rally.

Bantams compete

The Bantam tournament of the Storie Park Sports Association will be held this Saturday at Elexandra Park, with 16 teams and one standby.

The fun starts at 10 a.m. and there will be trophies for the champions and runner-up team.

Oshawa Whitaker Sales is the host team, and other participants are expected from Barrie, Belleville, Don Mills, Niagara Falls, Port Perry, Smithville, North Scarborough, St. Catharines, Bendale, Kitchener, Weston, Cobourg, Lindsay and Preston.

Proceeds of the tournament go to minor softball, and the games are OASA approved.

In case of rain, the games will be held August 1

PARKS

MARIJUANA

John A. Paddison, 17, of 50 Billingsgate Cres., Ajax, was released on $500 bail and was remanded until July 20 to fix a date for trial when he appeared in court on a charge of selling marijuana.

FIREFIGHTERS

City council has ratified the two-year contract with the Oshawa Firefighters Association, making it official and final that the 150 men will get a 24 per cent wage hike over the two years. The raises will take a first firefighter in Oshawa from $8,170 in 1969 to $9,275 in 1970 and $10,248 in 1971.

SPORT what is it?

What is sport?

What is it, this thing that helps young boys grow up, and turns grown men into children? What is it that makes men climb mountains, or walk for miles hitting a little white ball? What makes a woman try to swim the English Channel, or become a professional wrestler?

It's as old as history, this thing called sport. It's changed, of course: the animal, for instance, had the upper hand when the lions met the Christians; now the wild beast is a loser in hunting, bullfighting, cockfighting, for hunting etc.

Sport is a pair of 14-year-old boys finding an empty lot to play baseball; sometimes falling into a ditch after making a catch, but holding on to the ball because it means something.

Sport is organized too: it can be a little leaguer running around under a pop fly until it falls 15 feet behind his head, or Willie Mays losing his cap as he reaces to catch a long fly ball.

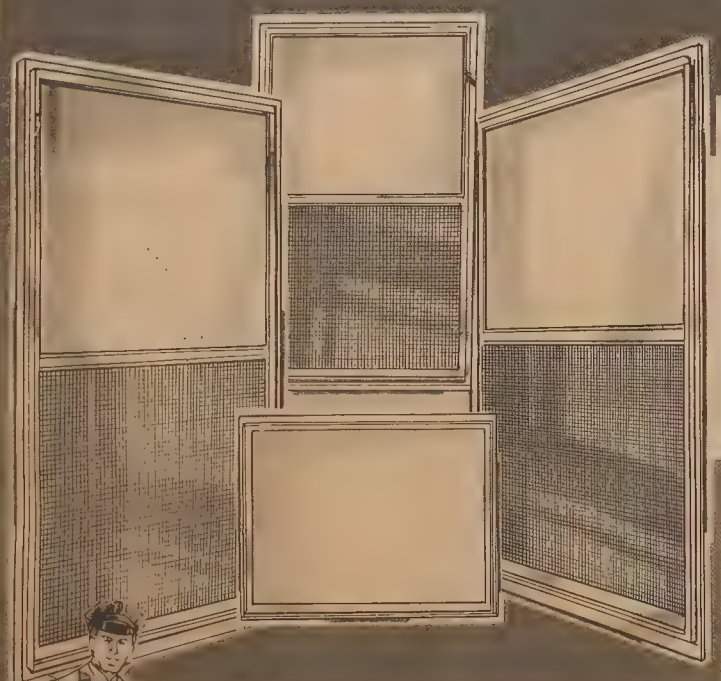
It's the excitement of Bobby Orr, sport is, or the strength of Gordie Howe, the speed of Ralph Backstrom, the grace of Frank Mahovolich, the skill of Jean Beliveau. Or the determination of a young boy skating on his ankles.

Sport is a brash youngster named Cassius Clay showing an unbelieving boxing public that he can do everything he says he can do. But it's also an immature Muhammed Ali bringing scorn and ridicule on himself, his title, his sport, his race, his country.

And sadly, it's also the bully boy, Sonny Liston, sitting in the corner of a ring and giving away a championship that demanded courage.

The official is sport — the man in striped shirt or blue suit, the referee or umpire that nobody knows or likes, the ignored, lonely and very important man.

There is nothing like it, this indefinable chunk of society we call sport. It pits man against his fellow man, against nature, the clock, the elements, himself. But it can team them all together on his side.



Sports truly makes equals of all men; there is no allowance for name, status, age, sex, color, religion, nationality. Only one thing counts: ability.

Sports is exhilarating, depressing, challenging, frustrating, dangerous, boring, irrelevant, irreverent and merely a form of diversion. P.D.

SUNDAY FAIR

City Council in an emergency meeting yesterday reversed its earlier decision and approved the Sunday opening of this week's Oshawa Fair.

7,000 KIDS
Nearly 7,000 children attended community programs in Oshawa during the recreation department's first week of operation. The summer program is spread over nine community areas, and special interest programs are conducted in the afternoons. A special program is conducted daily for the city's mentally retarded children.

NO MORE BUS?
Local bus service in Whitby comes to an end July 31, if Burley Buslines has its way. The company has announced its intention of cancelling its north and west runs at the end of this month. Service along Highway 2 and Brock Street South to the Ontario Hospital will continue, according to a company spokesman. Low revenues and non-patronage were given as reason for the bus company's plan.

CLEAN-UP
"Cleaning up;" downtown Whitby will cost $5,000, says the downtown "action" committee, it was reported by town engineer Walter Evans. It would cost $3,100 for 21 new litter containers and $900 would be spent on additional sweeping for a 32-week period.

NEW OFFICERS
Ronald Brasier is the new president of the Old Country Club of Oshawa and District. He was elected at the annual meeting, along with Graham Jackson, vice president; Lillie Finch, secretary; David O'Flynn, treasurer and directors Lewis Sherlock, Roy Seinger, Tom Smith, Frank Linlay, Betty Riley and Olive Mintz.

PORTABLES
The Ontario County Board of Education at its meeting last week decided to buy three more portable classrooms at a cost of $7,721 a piece. The portables go to Uxbridge, Sunderland and Brock. Furnishings bring the cost per room to $9,400.

NEW MARKET?
Whitby's Green Street parking lot may become a weekend farmers market. The town's traffic committee is to investigate the possibilities. It has been suggested that the east part of the Green Street lot be used.

DONEVAN CHANGE
Revisions will have to be made to plans for an addition to Donevan Collegiate. Stairwells ordered by the Ontario Fire Marshall's office under the present plans would have been built on insecure ground, it was revealed recently by soil tests. A plan has been devised to extend the present stairwells into the additions and add emergency doors to the outside.

FEWER HOMES
Residential construction figures in Oshawa in June stood at one-third the value of similar construction during the same time period in 1969. Building statistics released recently showed residential construction valued at close to $1,304,000 while last year at the end of June this figure stood at $3,991,000.

Commercial construction on the other hand was up from $384,000 to $609,000. There were 28 single-family unit building permits issued in June compared to 11 in June, 1969.

An aitplane in its landing pattern on approach to the Oshawa Airport passes over the trees of a home on Winona Avenue.

Scattered flak on airport may turn into heavy shelling

The flak at the moment is rather scattered but there is every indication of heavy shelling ahead.

This is the feeling gained by This Week in interviews of Oshawa residents living near the airport or along the flight path of incoming planes.

The dozen or so homeowners queried felt that while the small airplanes using the facilities in Oshawa's north-west sector are little nuisance, natural population expansion and the possibility of small jets are making them uneasy.

"It's lack of foresight on the part of the builders of the airport," said Mrs. Elliott H. Gray of 214 Winona. "They have deprived the city of a desirable dwelling area. It's time someone got smart and did something about it."

Mrs. Gray, said she has a natural affection for airplanes, but doesn't feel the present site is suitable.

"My husband was the manager of an airport in the Virgin Islands, so I know a little bit about what I'm saying. The present location, while we could put up with it as it stands, just isn't safe for any more planes and it certainly isn't feasible for small jets as some people are saying."

Standing with Mrs. Elliott was her neighbour, Mrs. J.W. Pickering, whose home at 220 Winona is directly under the flight path of incoming aircraft.

"It's a bit of a nuisance to say the least," she said. "On dull mornings, those big planes come right over our trees and almost clip them.

"It's really a bit much in a residential area and a particularly desirable part of the city. I hope this crash at Malton will get people thinking about it."

Mrs. Fred Jones of 245 Glenwood Crescent said low-flying planes bother her but don't seem to annoy her husband.

"Sometimes they come in so low the noise is terrific," she said. "As far as the talk about small jets landing, my brother-in-law from England put our hopes up about that when he visited here.

"He works at an airport in London and he told me he didn't think there was enough room to expand here to accommodate them. If it's necessary, I suppose it has to be, but I'd rather not see it."

Mrs. Elanor Howes of 871 Fernhill and Peter Anderson of 184 Winona shared the opinion that the present situation was tolerable, with one or two exceptions.

Mrs. Howes mentioned that things get a little hectic during the Oshawa Flying Club's fly-in breakfast, but added that it only happens once a year so it isn't that bad.

Mr. Anderson complained mildly about "a large General Motors aircraft" that flies over his house fairly often, but otherwise had no major beef.

H. E. Grose of 837 Bessborough had some nice things to say about the flyers using the Oshawa airport.

"They don't start too early Sunday morning so I have no complaints," he said. "Also, we're on the glide path in so we aren't bothered much by noise. I guess the only time I look up is when the Harvard Trainer comes by. It can be deafening.

"I sit out here on my front lawn in the evenings and the noise doesn't bother me. My attitude is that it's there and I have no objection to it."

Most of the other homeowners canvassed were of the same opinion: as things now stand, they can put up with the small amount of nuisance caused by overhead aircraft.

But the feelings of many of them were perhaps best summed up by a man on Glenwood Court who preferred not to give his name "unless it comes to signing a petition or something like that."

"Under certain conditions, the planes can be very noisy, but at the present time I wouldn't raise a stink," he said. "But should the airport get any bigger, and I can't see how it won't, then just watch out."

Monster or sense ?

To Whitby, it's the story of a monster trying to gobble it up. To Oshawa it's only common sense.

This appears to be the reaction to Oshawa's desire to amagamate with Whitby, the County Town, as part of a new regional government structure. Oshawa's merger plans became known last week when city officials revealed their stand in discussions of the Third Paper published in the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study. Much discussion will follow the latest report and residents of both Oshawa and Whitby will have an opportunity to air their feelings at a series of public hearings in August and in the fall.

THIS WEEK discussed Oshawa's stand with Mayor Bruce Mackey and Alderman Ed McNeely on Monday. Hopefully, Whitby's side of the argument will be presented next week when Mayor Des Newman returns from vacation.

Mayor Mackey strongly believes that the amalgamation of the two municipalities is necessary for a number of reasons.

"We feel our suggestion is already becoming a fact," he said. "The residential and commercial areas are growing together and in a few years there will only be one municipality in a physical sense."

See also editorial, page 4

The mayor said it is only common sense that the subject of this inevitable growing together should be fully discussed when the area is being studied.

"It's important to approach this thing with a certain amount of vigor and boldness," he added. "Rather than trying to preserve the status quo, we should be trying to come up with a development plan that we can effectively use until the year 2000."

Oshawa's municipal head said the city is not trying to ram the idea down the throat of Whitby or any other municipality in the region but feels that the idea should be fully discussed at public hearings to be held on regional development in August and October.

"The third paper is just a discussion paper and we feel amalgamation should be studied in detail by the consultants and discussed by the public. We intend to prepare a brief with facts and figures. We'll say to the province, are you sincere about all this?"

The mayor said Oshawa's study of the Design for Development program released in May by the provincial government convinced City Council of the correctness of its amalgamation viewpoint.

"The prime minister and two senior cabinet ministers are saying that Hamilton and Oshawa are to be terminal cities fro the Toronto area. Oshawa then has to be a major centre to equalize the influence of Hamilton."

Mr. Mackey added that it should be a major dynamic city from the standpoint of the region to offset Toronto's influence.

"Oshawa will always be a satellite revolving around Toronto. We'll never be able to offer the same entertainment as Maple Leaf Gardens, the Royal Alex (Theatre) and the O'Keefe Centre, but we have to have

Education show comes to the fair

A new Ontario Department of Education Exhibit will be premiered in Oshawa this week.

The 30 by 10-foot exhibit will make its debut at the South Ontario Agricultural Society fair. Staffed by three young students, the display is an open concept, walk-through exhibit and features photographs depicting the many facets of education. It is composed of fibreglass modules that can be joined together in many attractive shapes.

The exhibit is completely flexible. It can be shown partially from a 10 by 10-foot size up to its full dimensions of 10 by 40 feet. The exhibit will also provide fair visitors with a place to rest. It will be shown at 10 other Ontario fairs this year.

THEIR 50TH

An Oshawa couple will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary this Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh L. Gray of Oshawa Boulevard North will be at home July 26 from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. to receive their friends, relatives and neighbours.

Oshawa Fair for 10,000 attendance

Thursday is a date that is circled on the calendars in homes across the province.

Tomorrow marks the start of the Oshawa Fair and more than 10,000 spectators and participants are expected to attend.

Exhibitors from as far away as North Bay and Sudbury are going to take part in the affair, the theme of which is the promotion of understanding and appreciation for agriculture.

Whether the fair is to be a three-day or a four-day event was still up in the air at press time. One of the directors of the fair committee was optimistic City Council would reverse its stand and allow Sunday operations.

"They're understanding and intelligent people," said Doug Johns. "They realize that not only the committee but Oshawa as a whole would be placed in an embarrassing position under the present set-up."

The issue arose when the municipal government defeated a motion to allow the fair to operate on the Sabbath although tentative approval had been given earlier

"The programs are printed and people from all over Ontario are expecting the fair to be open Sunday," continued Mr. Johns. "There is no way we can let all these people know that we won't be operating Sunday.

He added that the issue isn't dead and he anticipates that council will change its mind.

"To give tentative approval and then refuse us at the last minute is an error," he said. "We felt that since we have an extensive saddle horse following here, we should continue through Sunday since this event seems inoffensive. Surely we'll get the permission we need."

Included in the program of events for the fair is the display of cattle, horses, sheep and field crops and the sale of home baking, needlework, quilts and other hand-made items.

This year fairgoers will be able to take part in pari-mutuel betting on harness races. Other attractions include two beauty contests.

Miss Oshawa will be crowned Thursday evening and an Ontario County Dairy Princess will be chosen the following evening. One of the tests contestants will be forced to undergo is the milking of a cow using a milking machine.

While Dad is enjoying the scenery at the beauty contests, the youngsters can amuse themselves at the midway or at various games of chance that will be set up.

Admission for adults again this year will be $1 while children will be assessed at 25 cents. Proceeds will be used for buildings once the Southern Ontario Agricultural Society, sponsors of the fair, sees its dream of re-location become a reality.

The present Alexandra Park grounds are considered too small for the type of fair the society would like to see offered the people of Oshawa.

"What we hope for is a 100-acre site somewhere on the outskirts of the city," said Mr. Johns. "The grounds at present aren't even large enough to allow us to set up swine and poultry exhibits although we've had a lot of inquiries about them."

Mr. Johns said the main problem is that in the Oshawa area 100 acres of land would be very expensive.

"However, we're progressing in our efforts to find such a site. City Council is supporting us in our search for such land. The site could then be used for all sorts of activities including snowmobile races and regular horse races."

Horses, and what their riders manage to put them through are among the big attractions of this week's annual Oshawa Fair.

editorial

No red herrings, just the facts, please

A few weeks ago in this corner we wrote a suggestion to Whitby council in the form of a "memo to Des." A lot of what was said was put in a tongue-in-cheek way. But the substance of the matter holds true today: let's forget about this nonsencial separatism between two communities and let's concentrate on what they can do with each other and for each other.

In a page one story in this week's issue, Mayor Bruce Mackey and alderman Ed McNeely make an excellent case for Oshawa's "expansionist" policy. Oshawa's suggestion that it become one with Whitby is indeed already becoming a fact. Certainly we'll have it by the year 2000. And so what?

If Oshawa — or, rather, this "end" of the big metropolitan region is going to have any influence, and if it is not to become the dog that gets the crumbs only from the table — it will need to be strong. It will need to be the focal point.

Needless to say that the situation today of two municipalities, side by side, building city halls and police stations and competing for industrial and commercial expansion makes very little sense indeed.

At this point it is of utmost importance that the residents and businessmen in both communities involved start to penetrate this issue on the simple basis of what makes sense. Let parochialism and the wishes of the individual politician who wants to hang on to his own "power" in his own baileywick be sifted out from the facts.

And let this idea of "keeping the local government close to the people at a local level" not be confused. Communication between the electorate and the elected man can be successful and meaningful just as well in a city of 750,000 as it can in one of 25,000 or 75,000.

In the next few months many politicians will let loose many a red herring to confuse the issues facing the people.

We admire the forthrightness expressed by a number of Oshawa officials in putting forward the city's plans and ambitions for the future. Let's have a meaningful dialogue, and one that separates the chaff from the wheat. That's what it's going to be all about these next few months, when hearings and reports will discuss the future of Oshawa and area.

Apartment and family - are they compatible ?

The apartment and the family — are they compatible?

That's the question a lot of planning and government agencies at all levels are asking themselves.

With trends towards increasing densities in housing across Canada, this subject is becoming increasingly important. At the present time, apartments house approximately 50% of the residents of the City of Toronto and it is expected this proportion will increase to about 75%. This trend is also evident in the Oshawa area with apartment units representing 33% of the total dwelling starts in 1969 and multiple family units amounting to 21%.

Most significant is the apparent lack of knowledge regarding the psychological and sociological effects of apartment living on families.

In a report to the Central Ontario joint Planning Board, Planner G. D. Cameron says expert opinions on the subject by an architect, sociologist, psychiatrist, planner, economist and a developer, is divided. Because of cultural differences, comparisons with other parts of the world such as Singapore, Japan, Denmark, are difficult to make.

There has been no realistic attempt to build high-rise apartments for families. Little in the way of innovation has occurred in apartment design over the past ten years. Lending institutions play a dominant role in this being conservative in lending money only on the basis of what has proven to be saleable or rentable in the past. This is also true of the developer whose primary motivation is that of profit with secondary interest in what is good for the resident.

Then there are the zoning by-laws and building regulations. Another problem is the reluctance of municipalities and ratepayer associations to agree to the construction of any form of high density rental housing, low rise as well as high rise.

But, to provide a better living environment for apartment dwellers, experimentation is essential. Particular emphasis will have to be placed on the needs of various age groups which obviously vary greatly.

In addition to other aspects of apartment living considerable importance should be attached to the management of apartments. While not generally recognized by apartment owners, the apartment superintendent is vitally important to the apartment environment. Too often the only qualification required is the ability to sweep floors. Specialized training may be required for this job with particular emphasis on human relations.

In many metropolitan apartment developments, tenant associations are being formed in order to express collective tenants' views to management. Apartment owners are becoming increasingly aware of their continuing responsibility to residents after the apartment has been built and the units rented.

And what about other forms of medium and high density housing? A recent development in housing is the condominium.

Condominium housing may be described as a continuous form of housing vertical or horizontal in which each unit and the land it stands on is owned outright by the purchaser and in which common elements — communal land, facilities, lobbies, etc. are owned in common. Unlike a co-operative, each owner has his own property deed, his own mortgage and may dispose of the property as he wishes. The management of the condominium is the responsibility of the managers association which may levy charges for management and maintenance as it considers necessary. Condominiums are available in both apartments and row houses. Municipalities and ratepayers are much more likely to accept high density housing if it is condominium rather than rental. This is especially true of apartments. Row house condominiums have tremendous potential to ease the housing squeeze.

Because 12 to 18 houses can be put on an acre instead of 3 to 5 detached homes, the land cost per unit may run 50 to 70 percent less. The cost of constructing condominium row housing is about the same as a detached house, perhaps a little higher because of the cost of better detailing, landscaping and communal facilities.

To tailor condominium design to the needs of individual families, some developers are building the basic structure and allowing purchasers to determine the internal design.

To date, consumer acceptance of condominium row housing has been excellent and lending institutions are tending to accept it as a safe investment.

Many families in Oshawa, Whitby and area are feeling the housing squeeze in a very real way.

Planner Cameron's promise of a much more detailed report on the subject in the near future is very welcome indeed.

A gentle note at the end of an obituary for Harvey Russell, retired carpenter, in the Phoenix Arizona Republic says: "In lieu of material remembrances, the family suggests friends take a small boy fishing."

ON DITCHES

And here's another interesting item from south of the border, where editor Nat Henderson of the Austin American Statesman says he has had it with correspondents who don't know the fine distinctions in types of ditches that border Texas highways and figure in wreck stories coming to his desk.

He fired off a memo "to all" and here are some edifying excerpts' "In wreck stories, cars run off the road into borrow ditches. The reason borrow ditches are there is because the Texas Highway Department borrowed dirt from both sides of the highway to heighten the middle and prevent flooding of the pavement. . . . Autos and other motor cars do not run into bar ditches, unless the drivers failed to see a ditch of some sort beside a saloon. . . Cars do not run into borough ditches in Texas.

Borough ditches are moats around British town or urban constituencies. The reason English drivers run into Borough ditches is because they all drive on the wrong side of the road. Down in Mexico, cars run into burro ditches once in a while. Burro ditches are trails which have been worn deep by the incessant passing of donkeys.

If turistas take their eyes off the road, they are in danger of running into a burro ditch. This is why Mexicans say that many Americans drive like jackasses. . ."

Pollution and the Great Lakes

A high level government meeting on Great Lakes pollution in Ottawa last month underlined the seriousness of the water quality problem and mapped a common approach to implement effective measures to combat it in the immediate future.

The session of ministers and representatives of the governments of Canada and the United States reflected growing concern about the critical situation in the Great Lakes, and noted the determination of the governments to take decisive action.

They agreed to coordinate contingency plans for dealing with spills of oil and hazardous materials; to reduce inputs of phosphates in order to arrest and reverse eutrophication of the Great Lakes (by legislation on both sides of the border); and to achieve compatible regulations of waste disposal by commercial vessels and pleasure craft.

It was noted that the Ontario Government intends to modigy its gas drilling program on Lake Erie to conform to the recommendations of the International Joint Commission submitted in a special report in April. (There is no gas well drilling by Michigan, Ohio, New York or Pennsylvania in Lake Erie.) It was further noted that phosphate removal facilities are being initiated by Ontario with a view to meeting the recommendations of the IJC.

The ministers agreed to the establishment of a working group to consider common water quality objectives and implementing programs which may be proposed by either government to the working group. This working group will report back to a reconvened ministerial conference which will meet subsequent to the final report of the IJC.

The action of the ministers from both countries responsible for environmental quality and natural resources brings into play a very influential force in support of the IJC plans to clean up the lakes. This type of cabinet endorsation should go far toward ensuring that the program of pollution control is carried out.

Chronicles of Osh

1. And in the second week of the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy it came to pass that the long awaited scroll of wisdom that was to lay the foundation for the Greater Land of Osh of tomorrow was given unto the people of Osh, and the Whitites and the Bowmans and the Jax and the Pickets and all those that were afar off, even as many as would and could read it or not.
2. And the scroll called in the tongue of the years one thousand nine hundred and seventy, OAPADS, was like unto the bible, in its length. And it contained chapters and verses in great multitudes.
3. Now the scroll to be known hereinafter as the Big O had been diligently gathered from smaller scrolls from the lands of Osh and Whit, and Jax and Picket and Bowman and all those that were afar off, and it saw the Pharaoh of Whit and his henchmen, yea all the Whitites coexisting peacefully but within their own land, with the Oshites.
4. And the elders of Osh girded their loins and among them there were more who said yet and they set out to put asunder the Pharaoh of Whit and his Whitites and to make them Oshites and people of the Greater land of Osh.
5. And there were some who spoke saying, "we've seen it comin'."
6. And the Chronicler of Osh consulted his ball of crystal and behold, he saw a frown upon the countenance of the High and Mighty John upon the Mountain of Qupee, who through his servant Darcy had brought about in the land of Osh and among the Whitites and all those that were afar off the writing of the scroll and the gathering of scroll info from the scrolls of the other lands
7. And the H and M John, without arising from his throne pushed a button that was set apart with the initials DMcK among a long line of buttons signifying by their proximity to the reach of the H and M's long arms their importance in the realm of Ont.
8. And Darcy, the servant of H and M John, who it had been written by the scribes of the day would one day walk in his footsteps and ride in his bubble of air, well, Darcy came with haste, and he bowed before the H and M John and spoke asking wherewithall he could serve the cause of the H and M and that of the peecees.
9. And the H and M pointed to messages that had been received upon the Holy Mountain of Qupee from the spies who had been sent to the land of Osh and among the Whitites. And the word from the Qupee spies was that all was not well between the land of Osh and the land of Whit.
10. And the H and M lifted up his voice and spoke, saying, Darcy my servant, could this be the undoing of our masterful plan to put together as one nation the people of Osh and the Whitites and the Bowmans and the Pickets and the Jax, yea and all those that are afar off only not too far?
11. And Darcy, the servent of the H and M John spoke saying, Oh H and M do not worry about this feeling of discord between the tribes of Whit and their Pharaoh and the people of the land of Osh, for all shall be well.
12. And Darcy, the servant of the H and M whipped from beneath his cloak a print of blue and it showed a battlefield. And the name of the field was corridor. And on the print of blue there were drawn on the one side the mighty armies of the land of Osh and on the other the armies of Whit, gathered as they were around the PHaraoh.
13. And in the centre of the corridor, between the mighty divisions of each land, there was marked a big bubble, and with the bubble there was a rug.
14. And the H and M scratched his head and then his bronzed neck and raised his bushy brows, questioning his servant Darcy about the meaining "of all this."
15. And Darcy the servant of the H and M John spoke saying, the Bubble, oh Mighty John is your second attempt at riding the sky in the basket. For when the trumpet shall sound, calling out the Whitites to battle and when the sirens of the land of Osh shall call the people away from the carriage shops and into their horsedrawn battle wagons, the H and M John shall appear from the clouds and he shall smite the Oshites and the Whitites with his appearance from the smog filled sky and they shall believe that you are indeed the H and M, and that there is none like you and besides you, and that they shall pay homage and do whatever you decree (through me, Darcy).
16. And the H and M's countenance lit up, and he spoke saying "I like that . . . but how can we guarantee we don't land in the sea of Ont." And Darcy, the servant of the H and M John spoke saying, we can't, but we shall watch the wind better this time.
17. And as for the rug, he spoke saying, it shall be pulled out from under the Oshites and the Whitites and they shall be smitten by tithes of great magnitude.
18. And the H and M John spoke, saying, behold, it will be my last flight, regardless. And he ordered the bubble blown up and standing at the ready in a remote region of the Mountain of Qupee, and he ordered his spies to return to the land of Osh and the Land of Whit, there to make report of the things that were coming to pass between the elders.

Rock festival at Memorial Park turns into a sit-in

A proposed youth rock festival at Memorial Park turned into a sit-in Saturday.

Several hundred teenagers who were on hand just sat and sat and sat waiting for the festival to get underway. Finally, at 4 p.m., the festival organizer announced that things would be better prepared for next Sunday and the crowd started wandering off.

An equipment shortage was blamed for the affair turning into a non-festival. There were people on hand ready to play, but amplifiers, mikes and extension cords were in short supply.

The organizer, Doug Firth, told the rock fans that people who had promised equipment had not come through.

"We'll make sure things will be better organized well in advance for next Sunday's festival," he said.

The crowd was surprisingly docile for a group of usually-active teenagers who had been sitting for some three hours waiting for the entertainment to begin.

Oshawa teenagers sprawled on the grass in Memorial Park last Saturday waiting for a youth rock festival to begin. An equipment shortage caused cancellaion of the event.

Things started to go wrong at 1 p.m. when the rock fans began arriving at the park. Through some mix-up, the starting time had been advertised as 1 p.m. instead of 2 p.m.

Rob Hogan, youth section supervisor for the Oshawa Recreation Department, said his department was involved in festival plans to the extent that it had been asked to secure the band shell for the private individuals interested in staging the concert.

"We had tentative plans to sponsor festivals this summer so when these people approached us we agreed to help them," he said. "The one stipulation was that the festival had to be free of charge and they said they could arrange it."

Actually, the recreation department got more involved than that when Grant Southwell, assistant director in charge of youth and senior citizens, volunteered his jeep to pick up equipment when the organizers experienced transportation difficulties.

By 2:30 p.m., some of the equipment was set up on the stage and two fellows made a half-hearted attempt to get things going on drums and guitar. They finally gave up.

All this time, the crowd sat on benches or sprawled on the grass with some of them playing cards, tossing a football, taking each other's photograph, tossing a Frisbee or just "rapping".

Several fellows wandered around the park taking occasional swigs from bottles of Winette, a sparkling wine that comes in small bottles that conveniently look like they contain soft drinks.

At one point, a youngster came by passing out pamphlets telling of a film to be held in the park this week on the subject of drug dangers. These pamphlets, for the most part, were either crumpled up and tossed away or turned into paper airplanes.

The well - behaved crowd came under close scrutiny all afternoon from a policeman patrolling the park on foot and from a picnic table full of older men who one teenager said were war veterans keeping an eye on the wreaths at their war memorial.

One recreation department official tried to save the day by convincing some of the musicians present to try to make do with the existing equipment.

They spent a few minutes tuning up and then obviously decided it wouldn't work and called it quits. That's when the organizer decided to call off the festival promising better things to come

Rx Drug Abuse News No. 2

STIMULANTS AND SEDATIVES . THE "UP" AND "DOWN" DRUGS.

The stimulants causing today's problems are usually the amphetamines that are illegally purchased under such names as "Bennies Speed and Pep Pills." The Depressants causing trouble are also illegally purchased under names like "Goof Balls" or "Barbs" and are usually barbiturates.

It is important that these drugs be taken only when prescribed by a physician or dentist. The prescription should be filled in a pharmacy and taken exactly as specified.

Chronic Drug Abuse is usually a symptom of an emotional or mental illness. Experimental drug users need information on the dangers. The next of these Public Service messages will discuss Stimulants in more detail.

Bridal gowns for fall long-sleeved and romantic

Jo Aldwinckle
Women's editor

There is a profusion of choice for the ball bride-to-be in a galaxy of creations ranging from the petite to the young contemporary sophisticate in the Piccione collection designed by Miller Chiasson of New York.

Fabrics are combined in delicate balance; lace with taffeta or satin, silk chiffons with velvet. The choice of fabrics ranges from Qiana, silk twills, Dupioni, taffeta, shantung, allegro and satin onward to organza covered in crewel embroidery, and velvet in a surprisingly lighter-than-air weight.

Miller combines the traditional with today with touches of lace to form a shield front or panel effects . . . spatters necklines and sleeves with jewels, or works jewels into lace, highlighting a hemline.

The controversial hemline was shown in four lengths: the above-the-knee look, to-the-knee, the midi which the designer prefers to call the shepherdess length, and floor length. There is also a graduation of color from pristine white, to ivory, to a deep ecru.

Trapunto is introduced into the bridal scene with flair and ingenuity to create unusual bridal fashions. The favorite is a sweep of Qiana, its bodice covered by a capelet of trapunto to create the effect of a Byzantine Princess. Silk cording is also used effectively to outline jewelled motifs.

Most beautiful is the effect of ecru crocheted wool on organza which Miller has crafted in a shepherdess gown that accents a tiny waistline. Ribbons of brightly colored wildflowers margin its ruffled hem. Colorful crewel work touched with lace is another outstanding piece with a neo-Victorian flavor.

The super-star for a Christmas bride is the creation of ecru satin bordered in sable at the collar, hem and cuffs. At $2000, this is the most expensive gown in the collection and instead of the usual bouquet the bride with the doting Daddy carries sable muff. The handsome fur is all removable and could be used on a coat or evening wrap.

Miller predicts that within two years, bridal gowns will highlight a cinched waist, there will be more acceptance of color and the return of the opera-length glove to cover the sleeveless bridal gown.

Ivory silk faced peau, beautifull embroidered with pearls and accented with alencon. Miller crafts a raised waistline gown with high neckline and full, bishop sleeves . . . the skirt spills to an attached chapel sweep for Piccione's Fall '70 collection.

And now the droop-proof curl

Electrical instant hairsetters have brought the gift of extra time and consistent good grooming to hundreds of thousands of Canadian women.

Never before have so many women created so many hairstyles at a moment's notice and in a maximum of 10 to 15 minutes from roll-up to comb-out.

The heated rollers banish nightly pin-ups and the sleeping on rollers syndrome, harmful to hair, rest and romance.

And they eliminate the offensive sight of hair curlers worn to the supermarket and on the streets; the refused last-minute date becuase hair is a drooping disaster; the what-to-do-with-my-hair problem between visits to the hairdresser.

What could be a better beauty boon?

Bouncier, longer-lasting curls from an electrical hairsetter, which are now possible with a new body-building spray-on protein conditioner that makes the appliance even more effective.

A revolutionary heat-activated conditioner, is the first especially formulated for use with instant hairsetters. It's here in time to droop-proof curls against the straightening or frizzing effects of summer humidity, heat and active outdoor sports.

The heat-activated mist can be applied as often as necessary because there is minimal buildup on the hair. It is also ideal for styling wigs and falls being set with instant hairsetters.

Hair is sectioned and the protein mist is sprayed lightly on each part as the hair is rolled up. The warmth of the heated roller activates the conditioner's body builders, which results in a lasting curl.

Rollers should be left in a few extra minutes for a very firm curl and hair should be allowed to cool when the rollers are removed.

The spray-on conditioner was designed by Clairol for use with its instant hairsetter and its five-roller as well as other instant hairsetters in its line, and will work with other hairsetters.

OLD NEW STYLE The semi-smooth crown and clustered curls you see in the old movies on the late, late show, the pert look of the 20's — contemporary for summer, 1970. The bouncy, full-bodied curls were created with an electrical instant hairsetter and a new heat-activated conditioner, which added shine and extra hold, vital for a long, hot summer.

From all angles, it looks as though the visit of the Royal Family to the North West Territories and Manitoba has been a complete success. There were fewer red carpets and stiff shirts than for any other royal visit and I think everyone concerned felt more at ease and natural.

The Northerners and the Manitobans gave the visitors a genuine welcome. They, in their turn, were gracious, friendly and good sports about the whole thing. Did you see the Queeen flicking the black flies away from her face?

Premier Ed Shreyer of Manitoba gave a very fine address, in one of the few formal speeches of the tour. This was at the Royal Family's arrival at the Legislative Building, Winnipeg.

Here again, the idea of holding the proceedings out in the open and bringing ordinary people forward to be presented was a refreshing change.

There was the 100-year-old man who limped from an accident in his youth when he was run over by an ox-cart; the family, a man, his wife and two children who still farm the same land as his pioneer forefathers and a young lad, Peter Robinson from Gimli, who read his account of an exchange visit with a German-Canadian family. This intrigued Prince Philip particularly.

Perhaps the most courageous speech was made by the Indian Chief. Eloquently and respectfully, he told the Queen that her great grandmother's promises to his people had not been fulfilled.

It seems a pity that protocol does not permit the Queen to deviate from her prepared speech. Perhaps she would have liked to question the Indian Chief. Perhaps she will make her own enquiries now that she's home. Those who have been close to her say that she is a serious-minded woman, acutely aware of her responsibilities and truly concerned.

I hope Prince Philip was able to sleep on the flight back to Britain because he had to be in Edinburgh on arrival to open the Commonwealth Games.

BUSY MAC

I'm sure McIntyre Hood was in the front row. In a recent letter, he tells me that for the past eight months he has been producing the souvenir brochure for the Games, writing articles, editing those written by specialists, selling advertising and seeing it through the printer.

"We have a profit of $15,000 on advertising plus whatever we make on sales." (Promoters of the Canada Games '73 take note).

"Since that job was completed I have been on general public relations work, arranging press conferences, writing feature articles and acting as host and guide for visiting journalists from the Commonwealth. All very interesting, but time consuming.

"Now I have been appointed Games Press Officer in charge of the results service which will keep me very busy during the period of the Games. So, you can see I am having a busy life for a young man of 76.

"Life has had its lighter moments, too. The first week of May, Bess and I had a grand tour of the bulb fields of Holland and visited Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Haarlem, the Hague, Delft and Volendam, a lovely experience.

"The last week of May we had a few days in Inverness, where I was a delegate to the National Conference of the British Legion Scotland. The next weekend we toured the Highlands and went to Glencoe.

"However, real holidays have to wait until the Games are over. In August we go on an eight-day bus tour to John O' Groats and the Western Highlands.

"So you see, life is still being kind to me. The only drawback is that I have been too busy to play much golf this year."

I thought Mac's many friends in Oshawa would like to share this news from him. From the look of it, I don't suppose he's had much time for letter writing either.

At the end he promises to send me a copy of his profit-making brochure of the Games. C.O.D.?

Seniors book could be best-seller

Fresh off the press this week is a very unusual cookbook, prepared and published by the members of the Oshawa Senior Citizens' Club and already copies are selling fast.

"The Art of Cooking in Oshawa" is a collection of favourite recipes from grandmother's kitchen. Many have been handed down from mother to daughter for several generations. Some recipes like 'Shanty Ox Heart Biscuits' (similar to Scottish scones) were used in lumber camps almost a century ago, when appetites were satisfied with simple wholesome foods served piping hot.

An unusual recipe 'Cree Indian Bannock' from the Cree Indians at Cross Lake, Manitoba can be used today either in the kitchen or on camping trips with the family. Using basics such as flour, sugar, shortening and spices, this dish can be baked in a fry pan over an open fire. What a delight to serve to hungry campers in the outdoors.

An ideal Bridal Shower Gift for the new bride-to-be, the book gives easy to understand recipes for plain or rich pie crusts. With a little experience, a new bride could turn out an "Old Time Lemon Pie" to surprise the taste buds of her husband or guests.

The book is filled with interesting and unusual names not normally found in today's cookbooks. You might try a 'Golden Glow Salad' with some 'Garlicky Cherry Tomatoes', followed by a 'Spiced Pot Roast of Beef'. For dessert you might choose 'Roly-Poly', 'Pickled Pears' served with some 'Jam Jam' cookies, or 'June Bugs'.

The book includes some pickle, relish and preserve recipes which would make the purchase worthwhile in itself. If you like candy, and who doesn't, invest a $1.50 and you will get two of the best fudge recipes to be had anywhere.

The idea for the cookbook came from the Club's Antique Show and Tea held in February at a time when people were enjoying and talking about old things and old times. The lady pictured on the cover in pioneer dress is the Club's number one supporter, Miss Olive French, who also just happens to be an excellent cook.

You can get your book from the Centre any day during Club hours, Monday to Friday, 9 am to 9:30 pm, and Saturday, 6:30 pm to 10:30 pm.

If you are a senior citizen (anyone 58 years and over) please don't hesitate to visit the Centre, where there is something for everyone. A telephone call to the Office — 576-6712 will bring a Calendar of Events for the next two months. Euchre Tournaments spotlight the card players activity, with pool, shuffleboard and quilting going on daily. The Saturday night dance party provides entertainment, free of charge.

On the Oshawa Fair's opening night this week, the winner will be picked from among these seven contestants for the Miss Oshawa 1970 title. From left are: Colleen MacDermaid, Una Dee Dart, Roxanne McKenzie, Christine Robertson, Susan Anderson, Mary Pearce and Luanne Peleshok. Who's the winner? Try and pick her!

Career and marriage can mix: seven gals

The seven finalists in the Miss Oshawa Fair contest all agree that a career is important to a girl and depending on the partners, career and marriage can mix.

Colleen MacDermaid, 18-year-old business girl would not want a career after marriage. "If I had a husband and children, I would want to stay at home," she said.

Roxanne MacKenzie, 18, would like to be a journalist and Mary Pearce, 17, a legal secretary. They would like to be married, eventually, and hoped their husbands would approve of their [illegible].

Luanne Peleshok 16, and Susan Anderson, 20, both liked the idea of going to business but would be ready to give it up, if they had children.

Una-Dee Dart, 17, wants to be a first-class hairdresser, "with a salon of my own". She wants to travel, too, and is determined not to get romantically involved until she has accomplished some of her ambitions. Then, perhaps, time to think of a home and family. "I would want children. A couple needs children as much as they need parents."

The girls were guests at a dinner given by the Oshawa Fair Board with Ross Campbell acting as host. Guests of honor were Mayor Bruck Mackey, Mayor Desmond Newman, Whitby, and Mayor William LeGros, Ajax, all of whom spoke briefly.

Alderman Ross Gibson and several of the judges were present and observed the contestants as they made brief after-dinner speeches. The winner will be picked at Oshawa Fair, tomorrow night.

Shalom aleichem from Rabbi Bienenfeld

Oshawa said "Shalom aleichem" Monday to the leader for the past three years of one of its religious communities.

Rabbi Jeffrey D. Bienenfeld, his wife and daughters Yehudis and Shulamis left the city two days ago for New Orleans, Louisiana where he will shortly be taking up duties with the Beth Israel congregation.

Rabbi Bienenfeld, a native of New York, came to Oshawa in September, 1967 straight out of Yeshiva University in New York, an institution for training Orthodox rabbis.

His successor, Rabbi Larry Langer, is also a recent graduate of Yeshiva.

"Oshawa is small enough to give excellent training to new rabbis," said Rabbi Bienenfeld in an interview with This Week shortly before his departure. "This congregation has the various elements that one would find in a larger congregation, but on a much smaller scale."

But the benefits are not all one-sided, the rabbi believes.

Rabbi Jeffrey Bienenfeld (left) talks over his future plans with Harry Feiner, president of the Beth Zion congregation of Oshawa. Rabbi Bienenfeld left for a new position in New Orleans this week.

"They get a lot of zeal and idealism from a rabbi who has just been ordained," he said. "I like to think we accomplished a lot in our work with youth groups, adult education and community involvement."

Rabbi Bienenfeld expressed regret at having to leave his congregation of close to 100 Jewish families in Oshawa.

"I'm not leaving because I'm sorry that I came here in the first place," he said. "The people have really been wonderful.

"It's just that in the Jewish faith, it's up to the clergyman to decide when to leave. There is no overhead organization to say so. We have a contract just like a business agreement and the terms of my agreement are up."

Beth Israel congregation in New Orleans numbers close to 550 families. The name Beth in each case is Hebrew for house. Zion denotes the city of Jerusalem.

Beth Zion first became a formalized congregation in the late 1920's although Jewish families had lived in Oshawa long before that. It is the only Jewish house of worship in Oshawa.

Coures for children with special needs

Three new evening noncredit courses dealing with children with special needs are scheduled for the fall and winter by Centennial College, Scarboro. A Certificate will be given to those completing arrangements and work requirements.

"The co-ordinated program is designed to provide insight and training for those who are specializing in or wish to specialize in such fields as teaching, nursing, social services. Parents also will be interested," Mrs. M. Warburton, Chairman of Centennial's Early Childhood Education Program, explained.

Mrs. Warburton originated, designed and developed the program. Mrs. V. Stimson, of the Mental Retardation Centre, is acting as co-ordinator between the Centre and Centennial for the first of the three courses to be offered, "The Development of the Mentally Retarded". Lectures for this course will be given by the staff of the Centre and by other specialists in the field.

This course, on Tuesdays from September 28th to January 17th, deals with the medical, psychological, social and educational aspects of the mentally retarded, from pre-natal to adult, with emphasis on current research and thought in various areas. Tuition fees for $39.00 for each course.

The second course on the Culturally Different or Deprived Child will be from January 25th to May 1st. It will constitute an analysis of conflicts and problems of children of various backgrounds. The third and final course on Human Growth and Development, from conception through adolescence, will be from May 10th to July 17th.

Foreign students at Durham

Class 9T30B is Oshawa's own United Nations

A casual visitor to Durham College this summer, upon entering one classroom, might think that he has accidentally stepped into a United Nations committee room

Although three divisions of the college have phased out operations for the summer, the fourth, Durham's Retraining Division, is in session and one class contains students from such countries as Poland, Jamaica, Ireland, Holland and Italy.

This is class 9T30B and these students who have adopted Canada as their temporary or permanent abode are striving like their Canadian counterparts to upgrade their education.

There is Merlett Ximinies, a shy, polite girl from Jamaica who hopes to get her Grade 10 and then enter a secretarial course.

She left two brothers and two sisters behind to come up here and live with an uncle while she furthers her education. Eventually she would like to get back home for a visit, but she intends to work in Canada.

Merlett saw snow for the first time last winter. She had already gone to bed when her uncle called her and told her to look out her window.

"I got out of bed and just sat at my window all night looking at the snow fall," she said in a recent interview.

Our United Nations in miniature is also represented by two pretty Polish girls, Josepha and Teresa Milek. They came to Canada just over a year ago following the death of their father.

Josepha, 18, wants to be a hairdresser while Teresa, 16, is more interested in a secretarial career. When they first arrived in Canada, they found the language and customs difficult to understand and for awhile both of them wanted to go back to their homeland.

Durham College's Retraining Division can be compared to a mini United Nations. (Seated) Teresa and Josepha Milek from Poland, Marlett Ximinies from Jamaica (and standing, left to right) Nick Van Seggelen from Holland, Sergio Latin from Italy and John O'Doherty from Ireland all are updating their education at Durham.

Finally, they enrolled in a basic English course at Durham and gradually began to feel comfortable in our fast-paced North American set-up.

TWO WEEKS?

Nicholas Van Seggelen came to Canada from Holland in 1954. He planned to be here no longer than a couple of weeks.

"I had three brothers living here and my mother was visiting at the time, so I decided to come over," he said. "Because I was in the army, it was easy to get my fare paid and I figured I'd take a holiday."

Nick said he actually was ready to go back after three weeks because he didn't like Canada at first.

"But then I remembered the class distinctions in Holland and I decided I liked it here where relationships between people are a lot freer."

Nick said that as a boy he found that being from a working class family, he couldn't play with children from middle-class families and he carried resentment about this into his adult life.

At first, he had trouble getting jobs because of the language barrier but he taught himself English and things got pogressively better until three years ago.

At that time, he had an accident which badly damaged his back and left knee. With a wife and three children, the probability of not being able to do heavy work ever again was a real blow.

"I wasn't able to do anything else because of my lack of education," he said. "During World War Two, the schools were occupied by German soldiers so my education wasn't very good."

Nick hopes to get his Grade 12 so that he can enroll in the proper courses that will lead him to a career in teaching in the mechanical field.

CLIMATE

John O'Doherty is another Durham student who never expected to be living in Canada for any length of time. He was planning to leave his native Ireland for Australia.

"I didn't like the rotten climate in Ireland and I wanted to get away," he said. "We had our plans all made when my wife lot a letter from her sister in Canada asking her to come over. The funny thing is, now my brother-in-law and his wife are back in England."

Sergio Latin came here from his native Italy in 1952 because of the take-over of his home town by Yugoslavia.

"We didn't want to stay under a Communist regime, so my father and I left Pola, just south of Venice, and came here. In a couple of months, my mother and two brothers followed."

Sergio married a Scottish girl in 1962 and is the father of a 5-year-old boy and an-eleven-month-old girl. He kept in touch with the customs of his native land by playing soccer, winning the Eastern Canadian Championship in 1965.

He is quick to add though that the high point of his life in Canada so far is the fact that he was able to obtain his Canadian citizenship.

Classical concerts for a summer night

By Jo Aldwinckle

An outstanding, student of the piano, Edward Philip Oscapella, who won the top award at the Peterborough Music Festival this year has launched himself as an impresario with considerable success for one so young.

Son of Edward Oscapella, concert master of Oshawa Symphony Orchestra, 17-year-old Edward Philip has music in his head and in his fingertips. He felt that many of the advanced music students whom he had met at different festivals and competitions, would like to have the opportunity to play for an audience during the summer vacations.

His enquiries brought an immediate response and he has arranged a concert series for every Wednesday night from July 29 to August 26 inclusive, in the auditorium of the McLaughlin Public Library, starting at eight o'clock. Admission is free.

July 29 concert will feature Barbara Kimmerly singer, and Elaine Badiere, violinist both to be accompanied by Edward Philip Oscapella.

August 5 with be a Mozart-Haydn night; August 12 an all Chopin concert and August 26 modern 20th century composers. Plans for the other Wednesday nights are in the making.

OSCAPELLA

Edward Philip wants to make it clear that these programs are not piano student recitals. "They are professional concerts," he says "by young musicians who are working for their Performer's degree at the Royal Conservatory and others who have studied under master musicians."

He launched his concert plan with a Beethoven bi-centennial concert, presenting four sonatas for piano and Sonata 8, violin and piano, played by Oscapella senior and junior.

His second concert, last Wednesday, "Back to Bach", he described as a program of baroque keyboard and instrumental music of J. S. Bach. Dr. J. N. Lowes acted as compere.

The program was all Bach except for a Vivaldi sonata played by Elaine Badiere, a talented vilinist who has studied in France under Pierre Monteux; at the Tanglewood summer seminars and under the concert master of the Chicago Symphony.

Pam Wharram played the two-part invention in E. major; Edward Philip played a two part invention in F major, a three-part invention in B minor and Prelude and Fugue in C-sharp major.

An occupational hazard we newsmen face is the invective hurled at us by people who are fed up with all the bad news they read in their newspapers.

"Can't you find anything better to write about than the war in Viet Nam, pollution and drug addiction?" is the question we hear nowadays more than other.

They're right, of course. The papers are full of such stories. One can't pick up a newspaper today without reading an item that makes him feel a little more depressed than he was before he began to read.

One editor has answered such criticism from an irate female reader by replying: "Madam, I hope I never see the day when the good things happening in life are considered NEWS!"

Another publisher has taken action to offset this sad state of affairs by launching a newspaper called 'Good News' that prints just that. Radio station CFRB in Toronto has a similar scheme where journalism students are spending their summer searching out nothing but heart-warming stories.

No one argues that the news filling most front pages is anything but pleasant. However, the most depressing items I've run across in a long time are those buried deep inside the pages of the Toronto Daily Star . . . and the other Metropolitan newspapers, I suppose, but the Star is the one I read.

The loneliest people in the world, to my mind, are the ones who take advantage of the service The Star provides in its Personal column.

Squeezed in between Furniture Upholstered and Clubs, Amusements, this column pours forth daily the woes of anonymous types who cry out for a helping hand or a bit of understanding.

"Sandie, come home. Let bygones by bygones. I have forgotten for the child's sake," reads one ad that conjures up all sorts of woeful images.

"Muise William, father of Joseph Muise or anyone knowing his whereabouts, please contact . . ." is the beginning of another ad and one cannot help but think sadly of a little boy wondering where his father has gone.

Then there is the plea for anyone flying to Trinidad on or before July 21 willing to accompany a four-year-old boy. Why would a four-year-old boy require a companion? Why would he be travelling alone?

The column is filled with notices from perhaps the loneliest types in the world. These are the people who are travelling to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, California or Vancouver and are willing to carry passengers free of charge.

Imagine planning a vacation trip and having to advertise in the paper to find a companion to go along with you. No wonder those Singles Clubs that prey on lonely people in the big city are so successful.

There is also an ad from a smoker (and he has his own problems there!) offering to share his winnings with anyone who will provide him with the King of Spades in a cigarette contest. How more pitiable a person can there be than the one who has staked his dreams on the one-in-a-million chance of becoming rich in this way?

The do-gooders who have dedicated their lives to helping the lonely also realize that the Personal column is the place to find them.

Their ads are there too. "Pregnant and distressed?" asks one ad with a telephone number where such a person can get help. Similar ads offer advice on women's rights, Gamblers' Anonymous, where to turn for your spiritual needs and who to contact when you feel like committing suicide.

But perhaps the most forlorn is the person who placed the ad: "Many thanks to St. Jude for blessings received."

Are they so out of touch with the deity that they feel they must contact their favorite saint in this manner? And, stranger still, do they think that St. Jude has nothing better to do than to thumb through the want ads of the Toronto Daily Star?

Watch '19' this fall

Channel 19, Canada's first full-time educational TV station, will go on air September 27, it was announced by T. R. Ide, Director of ETVO (the Educational TV Branch of the Ontario Department of Education).

Opening day ceremonies will mark the first day's telecasts, with regular programming beginning September 28. The new station will telecast its test pattern starting September 14.

EVTO is preparing for a minimum of 3,220 hours of programming to fill 13½ hours a day, Monday to Friday, and at least five hours a day on Saturdays and Sundays during Channel 19's first season. A library of 3,000 programs has been catalogued over the past four years. Programs scheduled for the new station will be directed to five different audience levels: pre-school, in-school, university and college, teachers-in-training, and adult education.

Channel 19's Toronto-based transmitter will cover an approximate 3,200-square mile area, stretching from Hamilton in the west to Oshawa on the east, and north-south from Newmarket to St. Catharines. Viewers in the area (about 40 per cent of the Ontario population) will be able to dial Channel 19 on UHF equipped sets. Cable companies within the contour will automatically carry the new station. About 150,000 viewers in metro Toronto already subscribe to cable TV.

The night shift

One of the most famous happenings in the history of the young 'now' generation, Woodstock, is still playing to a full house at the Marks Theatre. There are showings at 2 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

The Plaza has scheduled for another big week, Airport with Dean Martin and Burt Lancaster.

Raquel Welch and Mae West in Myra Breckenridge are drawing the crowds at the Odeon Theatre and will continue till July 29, when the Executioners and The Land lar Liitoja and Charlene Biggs, played the third movement of Bach's Concerto in D minor, as a two piano team and Pam Wharram, 13, and Susan Schultz, 14, both students of Canadian concert pianist Clifford Poole, played "jesu Joy of Man's Desiring", as a duo.

"This is great music, played professionally, but it is not square," says young Oscapella. "Before each selection we tell the audience something about it, what to listen for. We hope to make each concert a pleasant, easy-to-listen- to and meaningful experience; not in the true sense of a classical concert with a god-like figure at the piano bench, a cold embodiment of precision, but a more personal message. I am highly encouraged and excited by the response so far."

Raiders will take over.

Beyond the Valley of the Dolls is showing at the Regent Theatre, until Friday. Planet of the Apes, a science-fiction-comedy with a mind-jarring ending is scheduled tentatively at the Regent for the weekend.

The Oshawa Drive-In is showing Charlie, with handsome Cliff Robertson playing the lead. Charlie is a mentally retarded adult who becomes a pawn for a scientific experiment. Also showing is How to Commit Marriage with Jackie Gleason.

NIGHT SPOTS

Misty Dawn, a very all-round talented lady, and her group are held over for a second week at the Cadillac Hotel.

A group catering to the older swingers, Gene & the Starliners will be entertaining tomorrow and nightly at the Georgian Hotel. The five fellows will be playing all your instrumental favorites.

At Harry's Hideaway in the Genosha there's Jenny Jones and the Cover Girls for those who appreciate comedy, rock and roll and beauty.

A local lad who has found himself considerable success on the country and western circuit, Bud Roberts, will entertain at the Lancaster Hotel this week.

Enjoy rock and roll with Larry Lee and the Leisures and a pretty Lynda Lane at the Spruce Villa. A popular group in this area, they have been on the scene for some time.

Jim's Stage Door in Whitby, is hosting a four-man group from the U.S. this weekend. Held over for six weeks in Las Vegas the Millionaires offer a variety show.

The Journeyman Duo, a twosome on organ and drum are still playing at the Carousel Inn in Oshawa this week.

SEIZE BOOKS

An Oshawa police raid on Reid's Book Store, Simcoe St. South has resulted in charges against personnel and the seizure of a quantity of books from the store shelves.

The store, owned by a Toronto chain, was raided after the same chain's Toronto outlets were raided by that city's police department.

Charges have been laid for possession of "obscene materials."

Two bands next concert

The Oshawa and Whitby Civic Bands will present a massed band concert from the McLaughlin Band Shell Thursday July 23, at 8:15 p.m.

Both bands will be conducted by bandmasters S. Redfearn of Whitby and George Quick of Oshawa. The program includes "Capriccio Italien" by Tchaikowsky, selections from the musical play "Oklahoma", "76 trombones" from the "Music Man", "Chi Chi", and "Standard of St. George March".

Vocalist for the evening will be Miss Barbara Kimmerly, soprano, of Oshawa.

Don Allinan is master of ceremonies.

Youth Theatre warming up for August 4 start in Orono

Resident set designer Michael Eagan has arrived from Montreal to oversee the final stages of construction on the scenery for DARK OF THE MOON and ANTIGONE which will have their premiere performances on August 4 and 5 respectively at the Orono Youth Theatre.

After the visit of the Orono Youth Theatre Company to Toronto's Playhouse Theatre for a preview showing of TOUCH KISS, the management was so impressed with the critical comment offered by the Company that it has used their "quotes" in the advertising placed in the Three Toronto papers. Probably a first for a theatre company. Usually only quotes from recognized critics are used.

Subscribers ticket order forms are now available and a considerable amount of time, money and trouble can be saved by purchasing tickets for three shows (INDIANS opens on Aug 18). Phone 983-5617 or write Box 105, Orono, Ontario.

Here's a brief rundown on DARK OF THE MOON and ANTIGONE:

ANTIGONE

This is a tragedy, tanslated by Lewis Galantiere from the French of Jean Anouilh. Produced in modern dress — white ties and evening gowns at the Cort Theatre in New York with Katharine Cornell as "Antigone" and Sir Cedric Hardwicke as "Creon". The two sons of Oedipus, late King of the ancient Greek City of Thebes, had started a civil war and both were killed. Their uncle Creon became Regent.

This version of the ancient Greek legend comes from a Paris that has suffered under the heel of tyranny. The play's parallels to modern times are easily grasped, are exciting and provocative. Creon ordains that one of the brothers who had in his opinion provoked the civil war be left unburied.

Antigone, an individualist clinging to a higher law, covers the body of her brother with earth. Creon has her buried alive for punishment, which act brings about the death of his son, who was in love with Antigone, provokes his wife to take her own life, and eventually brings about his own ruin.

DARK OF THE MOON

Howard Richardson and William Berney, as roles. Various scenes. The classic of rural Americana and the perennial favourite of community theatres.

Based on the haunting ballad of "Barbara Allen", and employing a large cast in the imaginative settings of the Smoky Mountains, it recounts the story of an elfin witch-boy who one day behdld the beautiful Barbara Allen and immediately fell in love with her.

A compact is made by which he will be given human form to woo and marry her, on the condition that she remain true to him. The marriage is consummated and Barbara gives birth ato a witch child, whom the midwives burn.

In the frenzy of a religious revival Barbara is led to betray her witch-boy husband in order to break the spell. Whereupon she dies and he returns forever to the world of the mountain witches.

15,000 gift to hospital

The Oshawa General Hospital has been named recipient of another bequest from the estate of a long-time Oshawa resident.

Solicitors for the estate of the late Everett Arthur Lovell have announced in a letter to the hospital board that Lovell bequeathed $15,000 to the hospital.

Lovell, a pharmacist in Oshawa for many years, died early this year. His brother S. E. Lovell, is vice-resident of the hospital board.

So far this year, the hospital has received $30,000 in bequests.

The Millionaires, Jack Hammell, John Botly, Keith Hudson and Dave Marshall, open at the Stage Door Lounge, Hotel Whitby on July 20. The exciting and popular young recording artists bring their dynamic sounds and clean-cut looks to late night showgoers from a SRO tour of Las Vegas. The Millionaires have come to town bringing a unique blend of blues, jazz and rock to the Stage Door, where theu sophisticated sound gives a new twist to old favorites, current hits and several exciting creations of their own.
Their sound is adult, and all their own. As Jack Hammell describes it: "What we do, no one else does. If it's been done before, we don't do it."
The Millionaires are clean cut guys. Their dress is hip without being hippie.

TANTALIZING TREAT

Waves of gorgeous feminity to razzle-dazzle the most jaded or mundane show-watcher. That's the tantalizing treat offer by the smash hit THE LEADING LADIES at the Gold Rush Inn, Central Hotel. This record breaking entertainment blockbuster is doing SRO business at practically every show. Featured are lush and imaginative costuming, eye-popping production numbers, and dynamic choreography. The all star cast is headed by Marie Peaker on organ, Sonya Rogers on clarinet, Caroline Dickens on trumpet, Marilyn McDougall on sax and Gay Weaver on drums, as well as GAYE LeFEURE the lead vocalist. This talented line up will be on stage for one week only.

Graphics exhibit at gallery

By Paul Bennett

There is an exhibition of 42 drawings and prints in the main gallery of the Robert McLaughlin Gallery for the month of July.

These works of art were assembled by the Merton Gallery of Toronto, and represent a cross section of the best prints and drawings being done in Canada today. The exhibition consists of the works of artists from Quebec, Ontario, Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia. Artists are represented such as Joe Rothfels, John Henry Martin and Carl Heywood.

There are water colors, drawings, etchings, lithographs, pen and ink drawings, serigraphs, monoprints and dry-points.

As most of the prints are in limited additions they are inexpensive. The gallery urges any person wishing to begin a collection of original professional works of art to see this exhibition.

In the other two galleries there is still the exhibition of ESP — prints by John Esler and Charles Pachter, prepared by the National Gallery of Canada.

Movie titles are getting funnier and funnier, one of the latest ones that came across the Editors desk is "BEEN DOWN SO LONG IT LOOKS LIKE UP TO ME" starring Barry Primus and Linda De Coff, and that's not all, there is "W.U.S.A.", which stands for?? hold it, we are trying to find out . . .

In "DARLING LILI" Julie Andrews wears most glamorous wardrobe imaginable, created by none other than the famous Donald Brooks. . . .

MP Edward Broadbent leaves for Nova Scotia next week as part of his coast-to-coast journey to seek support in his bid for the New Democratic Party leadership. Broadbent is to attend public meetings in New Glasgow, Halifax and Sydney.

COME JOIN

That's the word from Bob Martin, parade chairman for the Whitby County Town Carnival Parade. Martin (668-6796) is inviting especially ethnic groups ("these colorful groups") to participate and he's looking for clowns as well. Thing to do is call him soon, he says.

ROBBED

The night attendant at the Whitby Canadian Tire Gas Bar was robbed of $20 by a man carrying a .22-calibre rifle. The man drove up to the gas bar and demanded money from the attendant. The car he was believed to be using at the time was recovered later on Perry Street.

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

Just as soon as the stars, or talent as they are called, find out that as of this week each show they do is taped and sent for a trip around the Jarmain Television Network, they might become impossible to live with.

The fact that cities like London, Brantford, Chatham, and Newmarket will in all probability be exposing our local talent could have an awkward backlash to it. Instead of being able to subdue the local stars something like this could happen:

"Hi there," he said pracing into the studio two minutes before air time," is wardrobe ready?"

The weary director points to a room entitled, 'Les Hommes' and stifling a sob of frustration idly kicks a light stand.

Re-entering the studio floor, the star, still attacking himself with a powder puff, casually drops little comments like "I wonder how my fans in London will dig the new threads," or "I got the sweetest call from an old lady in Newmarket."

All this because the video tapes are being seen by some 100,000 people in southern Ontario.

The Jarmain Network is now going to spread tapes from it's five stations around the circuit. Coming shortly will be the play, "Tom Jones" done by a Brantford Little Theatre Group and this show was taped in the great outdoors by the Brantford station.

This Thursday, in spite of the weather, Cable cast 8 is out to tape the Bowmanville Olympics day and the Miss Oshawa Fair beauty contest. Both of these tapes will be shown on Friday and the beauty contest will replay on the following Monday so all those who leave for the cottages for the weekend will get a chance to view the girls from the comfort of their living rooms.

Bowmanville will be featuring a three day sidewalk sale complete with a sidewalk cafe and bands and this will be taped for the news, and public information broadcast at 6 p.m. on Friday. Oh!, by the way the star with the powder puff got hung on his own petard. Someone put alum in his face powder and he's plumb puckered up.

small museums, art galleries and specialty shops to draw the people from the region.

"As we revolve around Toronto, so should the municipalities in the region revolve around us. A strong focal point makes a strong region."

Mayor Mackey added that it is ridiculous for a growing area such as Whitby to be competing for commercial and industrial development with Oshawa.

Alderman McNeely enlarged on this point by stating that it was a waste of taxapyers' money to have both centres offering the same services.

"They're growing together to such an extent that it makes more sense to operate as a unit," he said. "Whitby's bus service has pulled out while ours is going strong. They want recreational services and ours are well-developed here."

Mr. McNeely said the only reason the consultants gave in the third discussion paper for opposing amagamation was that a combined municipality would make it too large a municipality preventing the people from having reasonable access to the government.

"It's important for the people to have access to their government," he said. "But it's imporare to be terminal cities for the the government it is able to do something with their problems."

ALCOHOLISM

K: they now call me sir

By Tom Douglas

"I was surprised when you called me 'Sir' on the telephone. A few years ago, no one would have called me that, especially in the morning."

That's a statement by Garfield K, an alcoholic, who is a member of an Alcoholics Anonymous group and who spends much of his time spreading the word about the good this organization is doing in Ontario.

Garfield K was quick to point out that it is not shame that prevents him and his fellow members of the AA from using only an initial rather than their surnames.

"I am not ashamed that I am now doing something good and taking my place in society," he said. "A few years ago, I didn't care if someone saw me in the gutter."

Mr. K. said last names are not used so that AA members can get spiritual benefit out of helping others. They are not interested in personal praise.

He began the interview by dividing his life into three segments: previous to drinking, the drinking period and the time since he joined Alcoholics Anonymous.

Mr. K. feels that a lack of parental control from childhood over the amount of money he was allowed to spend was one main reason for his becoming an alcoholic.

"When I left school and worked for my father, a contractor, I wasn't given a wage," he said. "If I wanted money, I'd ask him for it. If I didn't get it, I just went to the till and took it."

Mr. K said he feels he had never learned to accept responsibility because of this easy money. He added that during his formative years he had always been self-conscious and withdrawn.

"It was the same old story," he said. "When I began to drink, I found that under the influence some of the things I didn't like about myself would fade.

"When I was sober, I wanted to ask Susie for a dance but was afraid to. with a couple of shots under my belt though, I'd be out on the dance floor in a few jumps."

Mr. K said that after he had been drinking for a couple of years, his capacity increased.

"Booze costs money, so I had to work for a period of time to get money for liquor. I became what is known as a periodic drinker in order to hold a job long enough to get money for drinks."

He said he would go 'on the wagon' for as long as five months and concen-

Community play areas have busy second week

Dr. Cannon Community Area has ended its second week with a bang. The Hiking and Nature Lore group toured the Automotive Museum and the Boys' Club is busy working on go-carts for the upcoming races. Friday was the scene of a very successful Penny Fair. With all the pennies that the children brought they were able to try certain skill events, visit a fortune teller or the fish pond. Winners of the Jelly Bean guess were Linda and Bobby Mayhew (tie). Winner of the watermelon guess was Lynn Spenier.

On Friday, pirates seized North Oshawa Community Area and declared it pirate day. Disguised in their hats, beards and tattoos. The children took part in a scavenger Hunt, which, to the girls dismay included the finding of a dead fly. On the winning team, however the following girls proved their bravery, Lori, Terry and Jill Vallencourt, Stacey Wright and Norman Simms.

Kingside Community Area was the scene of a Tabloid Meed on Friday. Many events took place including a watermelon hunt which proved to be a refresher after vigorous competition.

Radio Community Play Area was invaded by young hippies. David Lee and Susan Lowrie were awarded prizes for the best hippie costumes. The afternoon was topped off with a Paint-In. The prize for the grooviest painting went to Irene Maciejewski and Brenda Lapierre.

The children of Sunnyside Community Area went on a hike to Storie Play Area. They spent an enjoyable afternoon discovering and viewing typical sites of nature such as crayfish and toads.

Woodview Community Area concluded their second week of fun by dressing up in any Costume they could get their hands on. As a result anything from Clowns to Hobo's could have been viewed at the area. Along with the Costumes Kangaroo and Wheelbarrow races took place.

Hawaii was the place and Hoola Dancing was their thing at Fernhill Community Area on Friday. After a great amount of effort being put into costumes, the reward came as the children paraded around the Play Area and were viewed by many spectators.

A trip to Lakeview Park was the Special Event of the week for Grandview Community Area. During the afternoon the children toured the Henry House Museum and the newly renovated Robinson House. Although very tired after the trip the children enjoyed it.

Connaught Community Area became a Zoo of pets on Friday as the children paraded around the Community Area with their animals. Prizes were given out for the smallest, the funniest, and the most unusual pet. The afternoon ended with an animal painting contest, and a bubble gum toss.

The Oshawa Recreation Department will be offering Special Events of this sort each week

2,578 jobless total listed by Manpower

Monthly employment figures for June have been released by Manager J. Barnes of the Department of Manpower for Oshawa and area.

Manpower statistics showed 1,556 men and 1,022 women unemployment during the month.

Also:

The automobile industry indicated a few hourly-rated females on layoff for June with all male workers back on the job.

Feeder plants were not quite sure about their layoffs at this time.

Most other industries in the area have maintained regular production schedules.

Tobacco growers were recalling the same workers from Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec to help with the crop.

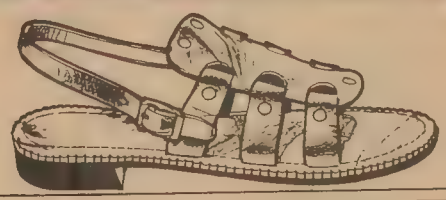
The wholesale — retail trade report business comparable to that of the same period last year in most commodities. Other suppliers reported consumer action to be improved over the previous month.

Activity in the Professional, Technical and Managerial section indicated no change.

Some shortages of qualified persons were noted in the following occupations: instrumentation technicians, psychiatrist, electrical engineer, physiotherapist, manager (retail store), recreation supervisor, estimator (print), sign writer and ambulance driver.

ON TOUR

Sunshine Rebekah Lodge hosted a luncheon at the Hotel Genosha for 30 students, and their chaperones last Wednesday. The students from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania were passing through Oshawa on a bus tour of Ontario, an annual event sponsored by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.



Stopovers were planned in Kingston, Brockville, Ottawa and Montreal, thence proceeding to New York City where a visit to the United Nations is pre-arranged and on to Washington D.C.

On behalf of Corinthian Lodge Secretary William Harmer greeted the visitors and read a letter of welcome from Mayor Bruce Mackey. Tomorrow, two students, Cindy Werner of Eastdale Collegiate and Pamela Gibson of Anderson High School Whitby, sponsored by Oshawa and Brooklin Rebekahs and Odd Fellows, will join a similar tour.

This 'Easy Rider' worries about computers

The lanky fellow in blue denims, flashy shirt and blue-tinted glasses comes roaring up on his big Harley Davidson XLCH 900 c.c. morotcycle and stops beside your car at the drive-in restaurant.

He takes off his crash helmet to reveal a head of hair that would have got you kicked out of high school, as would the beard he is sporting.

He starts towards your car and you automatically suck in your breath, thinking of all the stories you've read about Hell's Angels and wondering whether you're going to be dragged from your car and beaten up.

Thankfully, he keeps on walking on into the restaurant and you slowly let out a long sigh, your fear turning to anger that "those types are allowed to walk around free".

Perhaps in many cases your anger would be justified. But in this case, you are doing the fellow an injustice. Your fears are completely unfounded.

To begin with, this young man, Barry Sawyer, couldn't pull you from your car even under provocation. He has heart trouble.

Secondly, he probably didn't even notice you. He's preoccupied these days with cramming for exams on the long academic road to becoming a computer technician.

Barry is a Grade 9 student at the Retraining Division of Durham College. He hopes to eventually enroll in a data processing course and later get into computer repair.

Actually, while Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper perhaps over-dramatized the plight of the misunderstood motorcyclist in their movie Easy Rider, Barry does suffer from the hang-up many people have about cycle enthusiasts.

For instance, as he walked across the parking lot towards you, you had a stereotyped image of a fellow whose interests centred around bicycle chains and lead pipes, right?

Would you believe that Barry has his Grade 6 piano and gets a kick out of tinkering with an electric train in the basement of his father's Whitby home?

And would you also believe that he has seen every province of Canada except Newfoundland, every state of the United States except Alaska and Hwaii and all of the countries in the British Isles?

No, not on the bum, sleeping in flophouses and begging quarters or subway tokens on street corners. Barry's father is general secretary of the Ontario Medical Association and took his son along on business trips. So much for the generation gap.

Then why would such a seemingly-nice young man have dropped out of school after Grade 8 and be back taking his Grade 9 at the ripe old age of 24, you might ask.

Blame that on the heart problem mentioned a little earlier. For most of his life, Barry would get tired very easily and just didn't seem to have the aptitude for school work.

After several unsuccessful attempts at passing Grade 9, he decided to get a job and worked at several things before finally landing something he liked with Bathurst Containers.

After being with Bathurst for about 1½ years, he suddenly found one day he had become so tired he couldn't do another thing. He went to the doctor for a thorough examination and found he had a hole in his heart the size of a silver dollar.

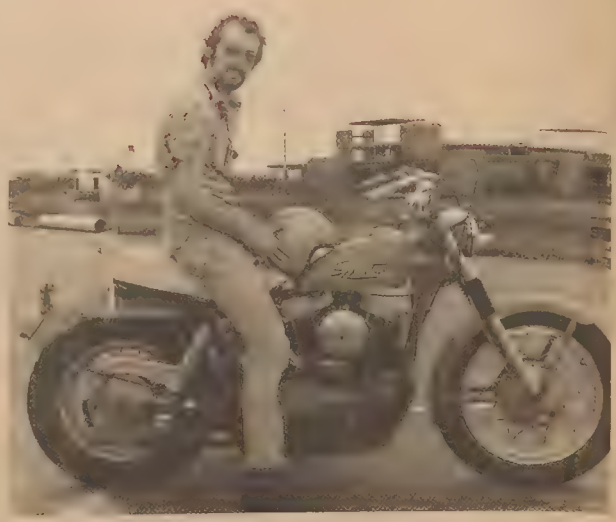
After a waiting period of several months, he had an operation to patch the hole and was able to return to work following six months rest. About a year later, the problem cropped up again.

After one or two more attempts to hold down a job, Barry decided to upgrade his education and get into something a little less strenuous.

"Even now, with the aid of drugs (relax, Inspector Powell, he's talking about heart drugs) I still have to knock off every once in awhile to go home and rest," he said.

"They recorded my heartbeat at well over 200 beats a minute not too long ago."

Barry's one great love is cross-country endurance racing and he is in the process of selling his big machine to get one better suited for this. Since he drives a motorcycle, he inevitably has to face abuse from narrow-minded types.



"You get the odd person who gives you a rough time on the road," he said. "They tailgate you, honk their horns to scare you or try to cut you off. I've been run off the road a couple of times."

Barry was told about the tragic end of the two heroes in Easy Rider and didn't go to see the movie. He himself has never gotten involved in physical violence to any great degree.

"I've never had to go that far," he said. "Physically I can't. I just won't let myself get mad enough to get into a fight."

He admits that he did get tangled up with a motorcycle club a few years back but found they were starting to get into minor trouble with the law and decided to sever connections.

Today, the only thing he's hitting is the books, thinking about the 250 c.c. Bultaco bike he's going to buy and planning for the day when he can be back out in the working world as a computer technician.

Long hair, beard and dark glasses on a person riding a motorcycle all combine to give people the wrong impression. Barry Sawyer hopes that his story might correct this.

trate all his energy on his job.

"That would sometimes bring me bonus money and I'd tuck it away without my wife knowing about it and then go on a real bender."

Garfield K outlined his steady progression down the road of alcoholism. People would tell him he was drinking too much but he would build a shell around himself to shut out those who tried to help him.

"I was very lonesome," he said. "I think an alcoholic must be the loneliest person in the world."

Finally, his wife heard about Alcoholics Anonymous and got a friend who was a member to come and talk to her husband.

"I went to my first meeting the next week," he said. "That was in 1952 and I've been a recovering alcoholic ever since."

DON'T SCREAM

Commenting that "too many advertising messages grab people by the eyeballs without regard to what we have to tell them once we have their attention," Bill Forbes, editor of Canadian Printer & Publisher, reports this item in his regular "The Things I Hear" column: "We once saw one of those ultra-modern, 19-screen movies in which every screen — all 19 of them — depicted noisy things: alarm clocks ringing, dynamite exploding, jet planes screaming, racing-car exhausts blasting and 15 other ear-splitting activities.

"Suddenly the deafening, nerve-wracking noise stopped, and dead centre on a small screen a candle glowed in the silent, darkened room. Then a title said: 'YOU DON'T HAVE TO SCREAM TO GET ATTENTION'"

ANTI-POLLUTION COSTS

The 1970 anti-pollution program of the Ontario government will cost a total of $91 million, an increase of $15 million over the last year.

Provincial Minister of Energy and Resources George Kerr has announced a program which includes progressively tighter emission controls for cars and trucks; a waste disposal plan; new rules for controlling emissions from iron foundries and asphalt mixing plants; regulations to decrease the level of sulphur permissible in fuel from 2.73% to 1.5% by 1973; subsidies and loans for firms installing pollution control equipment.

UNION-MANAGEMENT HOPE

Faced with declines in commercial and industrial construction, general contractors and unions in London, Ont. have negotiated a new residential collective agreement and moved into the residential field.

George McNevin, reports in the "Electrical Contractor & Maintenance Supervisor," that the unions have accepted less money, in effect, to facilitate the switch from business to residential construction.

While wage rates are the same, and welfare and pension benefits are substantially unchanged, the agreement provides for up to a 48-hour week instead of 40 on non-residential projects, vacation pay of four per cent rather than seven per cent, and time and a half rather than double time after 40 hours.

"It has been a long time," comments McNevin, "since we've heard of union members actually willing to accept reduced benefits, however slight. The most heartening thing about the plan is that employers and employees recognized the problem and got together to do something about it."

ARCTIC ISLAND IS KEY

Many a whaler's captain blessed the existence of the tiny but sheltered haven of Herschel Island in the Yukon — a "key piece of real estate." Here, he could ride out raging storms at anchor, and protect his valuable cargo of whale oil.

In the same way, Herscehl may prove to be not only a haven for today's gigantic tankers, but the missing link to make the Northwest Passage a viable oil transportation route.

Tankers travelling to and from Alaska's recently discovered Prudhoe Bay oil fields, 200 miles from the island, will need a protected achorage and turning basin. Herschel offers just that — a 1,200-ft bay sheltered on its shoreside from the thick and fearsome ice packs, and where depths of between 30 and 50 ft could be dredged to deeper levels. Here, soundings are being taken.

It is the only site on the northern coastline, in fact, that is potentially capable of coping with tankers as large or larger than Humble Oil Co.'s 300,000-ton tanker, Mahattan.

But to the chagrin of a major oil company, says Canadian Shipping, the federal government has made it clear that the island is not for lease, and certainly not for sale. For the time being, it looks as though it will remain in the hands of the RCMP, which once used it as a dog-training ground.

VALUE OF COMMUNITY COLLEGES

Mature students have a higher rate of achievelemtn, a lower rate of dropout and higher rate of on-time graduation, according to the results of a three-year survey of community college transfer students at the University of British Columbia.

The survey was undertaken by Vancouver City College. It points out an increasing number of students are going on to university after completing two years at a community college. Another result shows an increasing number of women students among the transfer students.

BOSS NEVER SATISFIED

Next time you're worried about "not getting anywhere" in your job, you can console yourself with the fact that your boss is likely to be even more dissatisfied with his prospects than you are with yours.

Jim Vernon, editor of "Plant Administration & Engineering" comes up with a recent survey of 5,000 managers in the manufacturing field revealing that nearly half of them feel their jobs don't present a "serious and adequate challenge," more than half of them "lack specific work goals" and three-quarters "get no systematic review of how they can improve."

Higher levels of management, says Vernon, are blamed for much of the problem "because they have failed to heed the problem of managing managers." The warning is that managers will do more shifting around. Nearly one-third of those surveyed stated that they are not so sure they will be with their present employer five years from now.

BIGGER DUPONT

The $300,000 extension to the warehouse facilities of Dupont of Canada Ltd. in Whitby is expected to be completed in December. Excavation work for the footings began two weeks ago and the steel frame should be erected within a month.

'You scratch our back, we'll scratch yours'

By Mary Ann Polillo

"You scratch our back, we'll scratch yours."

These words explain in essence what "youth involvement" is all about this summer in Oshawa.

Joanne Button, 17, Rob Hogan, 21, Peter Burden, 18 and Mert McDonald, 19, make up the Oshawa Recreation Department youth staff, an organization dedicated to helping the kids in Oshawa enjoy their summer just a little bit more.

The Youth Staff is offering unemployed high school students with much time on their hands, or drifters from another province, unfamiliar with the area, a unique creative and fun range of summer activities this summer including a leather craft and pottery making class and youth concerts.

Acting as liaison officers between the young people of Oshawa and the recreation department, the youth staff, is also eager to listen to any requests for help in arranging activities.

"If anything is a good cause, we can probably help," says Miss Button, an active member of the staff for two years.

Grant Southwell, assistant director of recreation, is the staff co-ordinator and helps smooth out any difficulties that may be encountered with city hall. Joanne says, "Some kids from the drop-in centre, came to our office griping about nothing to do, so we arranged a youth concert. We had to go through much red tape sending a petition to city hall, and all the Staff members attended a meeting there. Grant went to city hall and pulled all the strings for us, and succeeded in arranging a schedule of concerts." The Drop-In centre on Centre St., has no connection with the Youth Staff. The city specifies that there must be a volunteer over 21 to supervise. Consequently, there are no regular hours and it is very unstructured, with no set schedule of activity.

At the time of formation of the youth staff three years ago, city officials stipulated that it should cater to all types of kids. Joanne says, "We get all the different types of kids that come into the coffee house. But the kids will not mix, they stay in groups."

She says, "We have started to meet with different groups around the city — the East End '69'ers, the Drop-In crowd and Junior Achievement — concerning a paper that is being planned." (Called NARK — Nicest All Round Kids — the paper is being produced by the youth for youth, and is expected to be on the scene soon.)

Joanne says her work and involvement with the young people can be very rewarding at times, but "if an activity doesn't interest them, the kids can be very apathetic, and quite a few of them take off to Vancouver. But we keep trying to get the kids to function on their own, and if we can do this, it's great."

Last year, the Staff arranged a Hyde Park Day, "We set up a podium and microphone and let them know we existed, and to see what they wanted. We are arranging another Hyde Park Day this year."

The youth staff headquarters are located in the Rotary Hall on Centre St. and their hours are from 9 till 5 during the summer months. There are meetings held when a request is made that requires special consideration.

When the staff arranges a meeting, a police officer sits in. Joanne says, "We share our office with two policemen and we ask for help with any legal details all the time. For example, we had to petition to use the band shell. When the Salvation Army requested its use, it's ok, but when the kids want it, it's a problem."

The response to the organized classes now being held is good. "We have even older ladies phoning us and asking to join the pottery making classes." (They cannot because of the age restrictions.) The instructors for the classes work on a voluntary basis. They are usually teachers donating their time to teach the kids how to create for themselves. There has been a particularly great response to the leather craft class. Joanne says, "We pay for everything, but if the kids want to make a leather vest or something bigger, they have to pay wholesale price for the leather."

The Recreation Department youth staff's list of summer events is as follows:

Leather Craft Classes — every Mon. & Tues. from 1:00-3:00 p.m. at Rotary Hall. (Centre & Gibb) Leather and tools supplied with instructor.

What to do when the car overheats

A common highway scene during the months of July and August — especially during hot humid weather — is a stalled car on the roadside with a steaming radiator.

The Ontario Motor League recommends the following steps if your car radiator overheats:

Don't turn off the engine if the temperature gauge starts to rise or if the warning light indicates overheating.

If stuck in a long line of waiting cars, shift to neutral and race the engine moderately for 30 seconds at two-minute intervals.

If the radiator continues to overheat, drive the car off the road; turn off the engine; raise the hood and wait until the temperature gauge registers well below boiling or the warning light goes off.

Then, remove the radiator cap slowly using a towel or thick rag to protect your hands. Check the water level. If it is low, re-start the engine and add cool or warm water with the engine running. Never add cold water to a hot radiator.

If the boil-over occurs again, have the car checked at the nearest service station. Your best protection against overheating, according to the OML is to have your car's radiator and cooling system put in good working order before starting out on any trip.

Protect your car, says the Ontario Motor League. When parking, lock your car and take your keys.

Emergency vehicles approaching with a blaring siren or flashing light should receive the right of way, says the Ontario Motor League. When a driver becomes aware of such a vehicle approaching, he should pull over to the curb and come to a full stop. If there is no room along the curb, the motorist should pull up as close to the right as possible.

Handyman's corner

When painting a window sash or the putty around the glass, it's difficult to avoid getting a few paint spatters on the pane. The Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association suggests there are two correct times to remove those spatters — when the paint is still fresh or when it is hard. Keep a clean cloth handy to wipe off any paint at once. But if you don't take this step immediately, or if the paint is too close to soft putty to risk wiping off, wait a few days. Then it's easy to scrape off with a single-edged razor blade. When the paint spatter is partly dry, it smears and won't come off easily with either a cloth or razor blade.

VARNISH

A coating or two of clear varnish will protect painted floors from wear and tear. A clear urethane which resists abrasion is a particularly good choice.

GLAZE

Antiquing kits are one of the most up-to-date wasy to add "instant age" to furniture. For extra-easy and effective application of the final glaze coating, use plastic garment bags, suggests the Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association. Cut the bags into pieces approximately two feet suqare. Then apply the glaze to the furniture surface with a paint brush. Now wipe the glaze with the plastic until you achieve just the right effect. Plastic bags make clean-up easy — just throw them away when you're through.

SAFETY FIRST

When working with any finish that contains solvents, use caution. Always work in a well-ventilated room with doors and windows open. This will reduce the chance of solvent fumes accumulating and being ignited. Don't smoke while working with solvents; put out any pilot lights in nearby stoves and furnaces; and, don't use electrical equipment unless it is the non-sparking type.

WINDOW PAINTING

Before painting your windows, remove all loose putty and coat the wood recesses with house paint primer, then apply new putty. The Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association suggests painting in this order: First, the members, which divide the window glass, then the frame, and finally the trim, sill and apron.

Life is full of ups and downs as this young man learned painfully on the giant slide at the Oshawa Fair last week.

Holiday hours

Because of the upcoming civic holiday weekend deadlines for advertising in the August 5 edition of This Week will be 5 p.m. July 31st.

The office will be closed on civic holiday, Monday. The next issue of this paper will be published as usual on Wednesday.

Pie-in-the-sky. It's the big Zipper, the main attraction on this year's Oshawa Fair Midway. Time exposure was taken by Ron Peterson a young Oshawa photographer.

Fair is greatest ever !

Andy and Linda Dyment of Whitby turned their twins Ritchie and Steve into papooses to make the going easier at the fair. Brother Robbie had to make his own way around the grounds.

Fair shatters record

Attendance and gate receipt records were shattered at the 1970 Oshawa Fair.

Doug Johns, a director of the fair committee, put the official attendance record at the four-day event at 28,032 and the gross gate receipts at close to $17,000.

"This exceeds our previous attendance high by close to 2,000 and our previous receipts record by about $2,000," said Johns. "While our expenses may be a little higher due to Sunday operations, they won't be that much higher."

This would mean that the fair committee will have a bit of cash to salt away for the day when the fairgrounds are moved from Alexandra Park to more spacious premises outside the city.

Director Johns is hopeful that that day is not far off.

"This is only wishful thinking, but I'd like to see something concrete in new accommodations for the 1971 fair. We'd like to make it something that no person in Oshawa would miss because he couldn't afford to."

Members of city council's parks, property and recreation committee are presently studying plans for relocating the fair and have just returned from an exhaustive study of the Western Fair grounds in London, Ontario.

"We're grateful to city council for its support," said Johns. "We hope that we can see the setting up of an educational-recreational complex that will serve the whole community and area."

He said he dreams of the day when the fair will be built on an exposition site with an exhibition centre that could possibly be used for swimming in the summer, roller skating in the spring and fall and ice skating in the winter.

"Some of our errors with our young people have been that we haven't given them a place to get their kicks, a place to let off steam in a healthy way. This would be a damned sight better than trying to bail them out of drug court.

The fair committee director said it wouldn't be possible with such a complex to look after all the problems of today's youth "but it could sure help".

He said that it would be ideal to combine this with the committee's primary aim of fostering mutual understanding and friendship between agricultural and urban people.

The fair operated this year on Sunday for the first time and Johns said he had heard no complaints despite city council's initial opposition to the idea.

"It would have distressed us to learn we had upset anyone. Once again, it's better for a kid to spend his Sunday afternoon at the midway or horse show than to run all over the city or getting himself killed on a drag strip."

John Tychanski knows that one way to impress your girl is to take her for a ride on the tilt-a-whirl. Lynn Lidster looks impressed.

This is what the Oshawa Fair Grounds looked like to Mrs. Norma Haire, daughter Linda, 6, and son Jimmy, 4, from the top of the ferris wheel.

Games the post office is playing

The two sides in the prolonged postal dispute are so preoccupied devising new strategies, it virtually precludes meaningful negotiations.

To the average householder this day-to-day gamesmanship may have become a little boring and a nuisance, but to the business community, already hurting from a general economic decline, the rotating strikes and counter-offensive lockouts are an added financial burden.

The postal department's financial losses must be staggering at this stage of the drawnout stalemate. It is doubtful the loss can ever be recovered. Many postoffice customers such as newspapers which pay a substantial weekly bill, are seeking other means of distribution, whether or not the sporadic strike is resolved.

One must wonder at the absence of logic on both sides. The postal workers have made a case against the government's inflexible policy limiting annual salary increases to six per cent, and they are right in suggesting that they are being used as scapegoats to enforce that questionable policy.

But they are on far weaker grounds — ethically, if not legally — in decrying the government's lockout tactics while pursuing their own strategy of selective, rotating strikes. The workers cannot have it both ways. They fully realize that selective walkouts tie up not only the directly affected postal stations but many other stations which rely on the struck offices for their supply of mail.

And the government argues that it is not prepared to pay non-striking workers for sitting around with nothing to do.

From the start of this dispute, the government has been less than fair. It has prevented meaningful contract negotiations in the true sense of the term by fixing limits and refusing to budge. The postal workers have already scaled down their original inflated demands. They are probably ready to compromise even further. But they are fully justified in refusing to make that move until the government demonstrates that it, too, is prepared to bargain in good faith.

Unless the government moves from its present position, we may see a total shutdown of this vital public service. Perhaps it will take such a drastic development, followed by public pressure, to shake government officials from their stubborn and adamant stand.

Another swipe at the "high paid" teacher

Al Capp from time to time in his comic strip L'il Abner sketches a big-nosed, furry little animal that he calls the Kigmy.

This animal's lot in life is rather unfortunate. He was born with the rump you love to kick. No one can pass by him without aiming a boot in his direction.

The Canadian teacher seems to fit into this same class. Taxes too high? Take a swipe at the "high-paid" teacher. Johnny in trouble again? Blame his teacher. Billy gets fired from job after job for being lazy and incompetent? It's all the fault of the teacher.

Bryce Mackasey, federal labor minister, was quoted in the press recently as having called Canadian teachers smug and selfish at a Toronto meeting.

Why? Because one of them objected to paying for an insurance that he will never have to use. Mackasey, rather than discussing the issue logically, resorted to political emotionalism to counter the fellow's argument.

The teacher asked the labor minister why he should be forced to pay unemployment insurance when he will never be able to collect it.

Mackasey replied that the teacher should not begrudge the 50 cents a month he has to pay so that someone less fortunate than himself will be able to obtain relief.

He added that teachers last year had pestered him to give $2 to help feed starving Biafran children and now turn around and complain about paying unemployment insurance to help out a fellow out of work.

While Mr. Mackasey is to be much admired for the success he has had in settling strikes, his answer to the teacher is rather unfortunate for a federal cabinet minister, especially when at the same meeting he maintained that the Unemployment Insurance Commission is not a welfare organization.

But back to Mr. Mackasey's answer. The logic, to say the least, is a little shaky. To begin with, a starving child in Africa and an out-of-work lumberjack or fisherman are two different things.

And, while he never did indicate whether or not he forked over that two bucks he was pestered for (obviously he didn't right away or he wouldn't have had to be pestered) at least he had a choice of whether or not to do so.

The teacher's unemployment insurance contribution is compulsory.

Clear your desk

It is to be hoped that no one will attempt to steal a city bus in Oshawa. Because the end result might well be the total elimination of all bus service in the city.

Perhaps this is putting it a little strongly but it's certainly is not unthinkable in view of a decision at city hall last week to cancel all evening tours of the building because a number of items had been stolen by enthusiastic Oshawa residents touring the premises.

One report had it that among other things a camera had been stolen.

Would it not make a lot more sense to lock such valuable things as cameras and other loose items in filing cabinets and drawers where these things belong after working hours rather than leave them around with an open invitation to be "swiped"?

The "tour city hall" program of the last few months is something that should be vigorously encouraged by our civic officials. City hall and what goes on within its walls must be available and accessible. Many Oshawa residents don't have a chance to tour the monument they paid for during the daytime, so let's give them a chance to see it at night.

To cancel all evening tours of city hall because some city employees can't be bothered to clean up their desks at night is just as ridiculous as stopping all bus service because somebody hijacks the coin box from a bus.

Up the organization

God bless Robert Townsend for his book, "UP the Organization". It's all about how to stop the corporation from stifling people and strangling profits. One American journalist has called TOWNSEND'S BOOK A "survival manaul for corporate guerillas".

Now, if we could only get the Ontario County Board of Education to order a dozen copies or so of the new book, perhaps we would end up with a saving in the hiring of additional consultants firms to assist board administrators to construct charts of information channels on "information coming into, circulating, or leaving the school system".

Orderly, and cooperatively

Chief Jon Jenkins' comments last week about city hall staff's orderly and cooperative exit from the building following a bomb threat, is rather amusing when you consider that all these people who so orderly and cooperatively made their exit had not been told it was a bomb . . . .

What would happen, chief, if next time you levelled with them?

I call him the man with the grooviest filing system in Oshawa, but don't let that fool you. There are a lot of other things about Cliff Pilkey, MLA, MPP (take you pcik) that make bells ring.

A couple of weeks ago I drove by his house on Regent Drive, on the way to the office. It looked as if he was loading a whole pile of stuff into the trunk of his car, and thinking he was off on his summer holidays, I stopped to have a chat. Mrs. P. was so engrossed in trimming the hedge, she didn't see me, and Clifford was as engrossed in what was coming out of the trunk.

But Cliff wasn't off on a trip and loading the car with tents and things. "I'm cleaning out the filing system," he explained. "You know how things get piled up in the car. All these newspapers and reports and Hansards and so on . . . well, once a month I stop and heave everything into the trunk, and then twice a year or so I heave everything out of the trunk.

Well, you wouldn't believe the stuff that was piled up on the driveway by the time he got around to his golf clubs.

INTERVIEW

Anyway, I asked Cliff to help me put on another Cable TV show (Wednesday evenings at 6.30) and he said fine. So last Wednesday night we sat down in front of a brand new set, and we reviewed all that is happening and not happening but should happen on the Holy Mountain of Qupee, as the Chronicler of Osh calls it.

After the show the affable Clifford Pilkey (that sounds better than "the honorable" anyway) was off to his house and what he called his "severest critics."

Pilkey is convinced that in today's Ontario Legislature his party, though not in name, is really the official opposition of the Robarts government. And when he comes out with stuff like that, you really have to believe the man. Pilkey should be on tv more often. He's very relaxed and speaks with the ease of a conservative cabinet minister. (Some have said he is the Toriest MPP on the opposition side of the house, but that's probably because "after hours" when the house is not in session, Pilkey is the affable Pilkey, who gets along with people, be they opposition, or members of his own party, or the very member he fought with tooth and nail in an argument on the legislature floor hours earlier.)

Next provincial election will bring big changes, Pilkey predicts. And if his party makes it to power, he says the "restructuring of the tax base" will be number one plank in the platform to be implemented.

Some more of his comments:

On regional government procedures as implemented so far: "where's this participatory democracy?"

On Morton Shulman, the Mafia chaser, OPP critic and critic of everything else in the legislature: "he's making a real contribution."

On the provincial government's recent new labor bills: "They're not going far enough."

On today's young people: "They're great. They're asking a lot of intelligent questions, and we should lower the voting age, but soon, to 18."

On Broadbent's chances in the leadership race of the NDP: "He's got a long way to go but he stands a good chance. I support him."

On visiting Queens' Park: "Just give me a buzz or come down any day and go on the tour."

On his office at Queen's Park' "We're still short of help and of space. Things are filed on the floor."

Well, it was one half hour show that was over in no time. And we didn't even get into the beautiful scores the member for Oshawa is reported to have been getting at the golf course . . . .

THIS IS NO FISHY TALE

Over lunch last week our chief of advertising was extolling the virtues of a certain Muskoka river which runs close by his cottage, and how some fishermen land the greatest of Muskies from this wonder. I panic at the sight of a good size pike, but of course seasoned fishermen don't. So one of these boys who fishes this amazing Muskoka river landed his Muskie, panicked when it landed in the boat and started to nibble and snarl away at the oars, and subsequently shot it with a shotgun that happened to be handy.

Well, yes, the boat sank, almost . . . .

NEARBY PARK

After Darlington Provincial Park where the swimming is practically impossible, the nearest Park to this area is the one on Rice Lake called Serpent Mounds. We discovered it by accident past week. Take Taunton Road East to 115, go north, turn off to Bewdley and follow along the north shore of Rice Lake. You can't miss it if you show enough patience with dead-end country roads in your efforts to stick close to the lakeshore line.

The park is a marvellous setup, with three beaches and camping facilities second to none. Trouble is, you've got to hit it in the beginning of the week, and even then you may end up on the waiting list. Provincial Parks officials tell me it's the story of the summer in most provincial parks within a 100 mile radius of Toronto.

There's a shorter way also. Take Taunton or 401 to 115, to 28, to 7 and hit the park just past the Peterborough bypass. That's about an hour's drive at a leisurely pace.

Despite the many pleasurable moments last week's Oshawa Fair provided, I still have to blame it for my low spirits this week.

Up until my trip to the fair, I had been able to ignore the slowly-growing bulge above my belt line and the more and more hairs I have to rinse out of the sink every time I wash my hair.

But now I have to face facts . . . I'm getting old! A ride on the ferris wheel and a few spins on the tilt-a-whirl and my stomach felt as though I had crossed the English Channel in a mid-December storm after a three-day drunk.

I can remember times when I would be first in line at the midway entrance and my father would have to drag me home late the same evening after the revenue from a whole winter of shovelling driveways had been spent on the Octopus, the Salt and Pepper Shakers, Bump 'em Cars, the Roller Coaster and the Moon Rocket.

Last week, the tilt-a-whirl had taken no more than two turns when my heart began to thump, my head started spinning and I broke into a cold sweat. It was all I could do to stop myself from yelling I wanted off.

Once I managed to stagger back to firm ground, my condition was aggravated by the smell of greasy hamburgers cooking on a grill at one of the booths. In my youth, I could have eaten three of them and washed them down with warm, flat cola, two taffy apples, some candy floss and a bag of week-old popcorn.

However, the rest of the fair brought back fonder memories, so the dollar I had to pay (what ever happened to FREEDOM of the press?) was well worth it.

The booth operators still droned their slick patter about how much my girl would love me if I won her a pink poodle. All I'd have to do is knock down three wooden milk bottles and while I've seen other do it, I'm sure they nail then down when they see me coming.

Then there was the barker for the Haunted House who had 40 reasons memorized for why you should fork over a quarter to go inside. These he intoned like an Oriental monk, stopping only long enough to take swigs from a suspicious-looking paper cup.

The same tough-looking types operated the rides, their tattoes dimly showing through bare arms that couldn't have been washed in a week. And whenever a pretty girl on the ride screamed, they would increase the speed a little, smiling at her with teeth resembling a broken picket fence.

The kids still ran bright-eyed up to the duck pond, hoping to win a giant panda that they could never carry home and walked away dejected with the plastic comb or whistle that their number inevitably had drawn.

Little girls still had to have Mommy stand beside them as they rode the Merry-go-round and little boys still grabbed handfuls of each other's candy floss, threatening in loud voices to tell on each other for doing so.

But something the Oshawa Fair had that we never saw at such events was not one but two beauty contests where all sorts of pretty and near-pretty girls vied for the honors and cash awards that winning would bring.

Members of the women's liberation movement get all in a dither (or is that too feminine a word for them?) about such contests, saying that the girls are treated just like so many sides of beef for the amusement of men.

Those who stage such events counter this by pointing out that the girl is judged on far more than appearance. There are interviews to test her intelligence, quizzes to weigh her knowledge of current world affairs and talent contests to see what else she can do besides fill out a bathing suit.

While I am in no way suggesting that the judges of the Oshawa contests behaved in the following manner, I can't help but scoff when I hear of all the things a girl is judged on before the winner is selected.

It makes me recall a beauty contest a friend of mine once judged in league with two other men in that particular community (the name of which will remain a secret to protect the guilty).

The three of them had gone through all the interviews, quizzes and talent exhibitions and were just about to see the girls parade by in bathing suits before having to make up their minds on a winner.

At that point, one of the judges leaned over to his colleagues and complained that he had no way of deciding whether intelligence should be rated above knowledge of current affairs or vice versa.

The other fellow agreed and asked how he was supposed to decide whether a nice singing voice should get a girl more points than a good tap-dance routine.

My friend solved the problem by suggesting they forget about everything they had seen so far and award points in three categories.

"You rate the face," he said to one judge, "you give points for nice legs," he said to the other, "and I'll judge everything in between."

Chronicles of Osh

1. And it came to pass as the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy was drawing to a close that the elders of the land of Osh, and the Pharaoh and his henchmen in the land of Whit had come no nearer to the final disposition of borders that separated the land of Whit from the land of Osh and vice versa.

2. And one of the journals of the land of Whit, which in the summer of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy had no less than four journals, plus the Tymes of Osh, well, this journal gave many a whirl to the thoughts and delusions of grandeur as exposed in those days by the Pharaoh of Whit.

3. And it whirled, saying, behold, the land of Osh and those who live therein, except some, but at least its elders, are like unto a swine with bubbles of an unbecomong nature. And it whirled moreover,

What when there's a bomb in building

A squad of police officers will lecture civil servants and businessmen in Oshawa this fall on what to do if a bomb is found in their building.

Police Chief Jon Jenkins told This Week that a precis on bomb procedures is being drawn up by his department following the evacuation last week of city hall due to a bomb scare.

"We hope to start going around to varius public buildings as well as private businesses and industry in September," said Chief Jenkins. "We want to tell people what we expect them to do if they are warned of a bomb or find one."

The city hall complex was cleared Thursday morning when the local Bell Telephone office received an anonymous call warning of a bomb planted in the municipal building.

The previous evening, Oshawa police had been telephoned directly at 10:30 p.m. by a person who stated that a bomb in city hall would go off at midnight.

In both cases, the warnings turned out to be false. An Oshawa man, Gordon Paul Taylor, 23, of 57 Colborne Street East has since been charged with two counts of conveying false information.

Chief Jenkins had high praise for the staff of city hall for the calm way in which they evacuated the building and said he hoped that should there be a similar occurrence, others will behave the same.

"Of course, we don't anticipate anything like this happening again, but we want everyone to be prepared in case it does."

The police department itself is prepared for an actual bomb plant with four officers trained by the Metropolitan Toronto police in bomb disposal techniques.

"We have one of them on each shift and another in intelligence who is in and out of here all the time," said the chief.

Taking a course

He added that several other men will be taking a course this fall from the Montreal police department.

"They are more experienced that anybody else when it comes to this sort of thing. We know that there will be policemen from New York and other states taking the same course."

Chief Jenkins said that bomb disposal training is just another instance of the department having its officers as well-trained as possible.

The latest bomb scares bring the total in the past two years to six. The only case of an actual bomb being planted occurred about 10 years ago when one was found in the Royal Bank at Bond and Simcoe Streets.

"It was a poor outfit and was defused by an officer of the department who had no training in this at all," said the chief.

"RS" pleased with concert

A recent concert by the Oshawa Civic Band, honoring Col. R.S. McLaughlin, received swift acknowledgment from Oshawa's first citizen.

"I was very pleased by the concert in my honor and at the same time impressed by the quality of the music being played by Capt. Quick and his talented musicians," Mr. McLaughlin said. "I enjoyed very very much the taped version of the concert which was so thoughtfully sent to me and I can assure the band that it will be played many times at Parkwood. Oshawa is fortunate in being the home of one of Canada's best bands. It does our city proud."

The Oshawa Civic Band is directed by Capt. George B.C. Quick, CD., LRAM., ARCM.

Mr. McLaughlin is making good progress at Parkwood following recent surgery. He looks forward to his 99th birthday on Sept. 8.

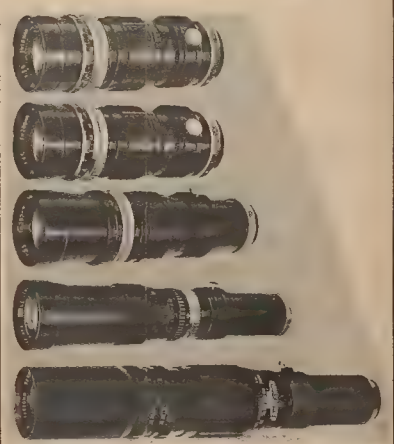
Warn of thefts at swimming pools

Reports from the four swimming pools operated by the Oshawa Recreation Department indicate an increasing number of thefts.

High in the list are footwear, particularly desert boots and the new wooden exercise sandals. Other articles of clothing are also reported missing as well as money and other valuables which are left in pockets of clothing.

The Department offers some type of checking service at each pool, however, all are not equipped for the complete service.

Parents are urged to encourage their children to check any itsms of a valuable nature when they arrive at the pools, and to wear the checking pin they are issued.



Recreation officials ask parents question the origin of articles of clothing etc. their children may be wearing that were not purchased for them.

The Department must, if children are suspected of stealing from the change rooms, turn the matter over to the police, both in an effort to stop this problem and for the benefit of the child suspected, said an official.

"BARBS" AND "GOOF BALLS" THEY "PUT YOU DOWN"

Slang terms for illegal purchases are "Pep Pills," "Bennies" and "Speed." Injecting Amphetamines for quicker action has caused deaths. The next of these Public Service messages will discuss "Barbs" and "Goof Balls."

When prescribed by a physician, these stimulants can check fatigue, increase alertness and when carefully supervised can control overweight

They are too risky for self-medication. Uncontrolled large dosages cause jitterness, irritability, unclear speech and tension. Emotions are dulled and proper thinking is impaired. They increase the heart rate and cause sweating, headaches, diarrhea, and loss of appetite.

Highway No. 2 Between Oshawa and Whitby

by jo aldwinckle

Sooner or later, everybody goes to Stratford. Whenever I'm there, I invariably run into someone from Oshawa and last week was no exception. I hadn't even opened the program for the matinee performance in the Festival Theatre when I heard, "Hi, Jo," over my shoulder. There, all smiles was Paul Bennett, director of the Robert McLaughlin Art Gallery.

That's part of the charm of Stratford. It has become a cultural mecca and a real festival city without getting smug, snooty or stuffy. The pennants decorating the street lamp posts and the flower boxes and baskets give the main streets a cheerful appearance. There are interesting, well-stocked book shops, gift shops with unusual and artistic wares, china and linen shops and plenty of good restaurants.

Stratford has its beauty spots, too. The Shakespeare Garden is a pleasant place for a quiet hour. I was told that every flower mentioned in Shakespeare's works has been planted in the borders. The lawns around Victoria Lake, shaded by venerable chestnut trees, suggest a delightful setting for a picnic lunch. The swans glide by and the greedy ducks waddle ashore for the crumbs. In this relaxed atmosphere I've seen strangers strike up a conversation, — and hold it.

Townsfolk and visitors still line the stone balustrade to spot celebrities arriving at the theatre. I recognized Professor Robertson Davies (The Beard) and Mrs. Davies; Dora Mavor Moore (Mavor Moore's Mum who else?) and Tom Kneebone playing hookey from The Dell where his successful Noel Coward Revue is being held over until October.

Several familiar drama critics were in town, anticipating the opening performance of "The Friends" at the Avon Theatre. In a nearby restaurant I exchanged greetings with Herbert Whittaker, drama critic of The Globe and Mail.

Donald Davis who with his brother, Murray, launched the Crest Theatre and who has addressed clubs in Oshawa on various occasions, gave such an outstanding performance as Shylock in The Merchant of Venice, that my companion, Margaret Ness, and I felt impelled to go backstage and congratulate him.

He received us warmly. Wearing a nondescript bath-robe, bare-footed and without make-up, he was still a commanding figure who accepted our compliments with unfeigned pleasure and modesty. Truly great actors and artists, are like that, I have found, — no sham.

After an exciting evening of theatre, the next morning, if you're lucky, you can recognize the actors in the town.

In this way, we bumped into Bill Needles, one of Canada's steadiest, all-round actors and a Stratford regular. He was on his way to a rehearsal of Vatzlav. He was eager to know what we had seen and whether we had liked it. That over, he shook hands and thanked us for saying "Hello".

That's what actors are like, openly friendly people.

I don't know what it's like in the winter, but in summertime Stratford must surely be the friendliest town in Ontario.

Women's exhibit shows appetizing array of new foods

By Jo Aldwinckle

To some degree, fast freezing may have supplanted home preserving of fruit and vegetables but there was an appetizing array in the women's exhibition at Oshawa Fair last week.

There was some luscious raspberry jam and just the look of the chili sauce set the taste-buds watering.

Women still do their own baking too. There was some inviting bread including a whole wheat loaf that was just begging for some creamery butter. There were all kinds of cakes. Somehow the dark fruit and the chocolate cakes caught the eye first.

There must still be some girls who like to help their mothers in the kitchen, because in the

Morrison-Sleep

In an evening ceremony at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church (Whitby) Linda Margaret Sleep and William Nelson Morrison were married.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Clarence Sleep of Whitby and the groom the son of Mr. & Mrs. Oscar Morrison of Oshawa.

Rev. W.J.S. McClure performed the July 17 ceremony with soloist Mrs. Cathy Randall accompanied by John Robertson.

Given in marriage by her brother-in-law (Mr. Gord Baker) the bride wore a full length formal of crystal charm crepe glace — fitted empire bodice — rolled mandarin neckline — ¾ length bell sleeves trimmed with French guipere lace — full length skirt slightly fitted at front with charming full length chapel train edged and trimmed with lace.

Her headdress — nylon sheer floral arrangement with a 3 layer French nylon illusion veil (shoulder length).

The bride carried a bouquet of deep pink sweetheart roses.

Maid of honor was Mrs. Shirley Gastin, Toronto with bridesmaids — Mrs. Dorean Baker, Oshawa (sister of the bride), Mrs. Barbara Sleep (sister-in-law of the bride), Whitby, Mrs. Barbara Thajer, Oshawa. Flower girl was the niece of the bride from Oshawa, Cherie Baker. Ring bearer was nephew of the groom from Oshawa, Danny Thajer.

Best man was Allan Griffin of Toronto, with ushers Horst Thajer, brother-in-law of the groom, Oshawa and James Sleep & Allan Morrison (brother of the g/oom) of Whitby.

The reception was held at the Bowmanville Centennial Hall and for a honeymoon to the States the bride wore a navy and white dress and coat ensemble with white accessories. The newlyweds will live in Oshawa.

Flying kites

The Oshawa Recreation Department is holding a Kite Derby tomorrow July 30th, from 1:30 P.M. to 4:15 P.M., at Lakeview Park north of the Pavilion.

Nine Community Play Areas will participate in this second City Wide Special Event. Ribbons will be given to the winners of the biggest, smallest and funniest kites.

PRINCE MEETS OSHAWA STAFFER

Before Prince Charles flew to Frobisher Bay to meet his parents and sister, he visited a camp at Mink Lake where 125 boys from the Ottawa Boys' Club were enjoying the outdoor life.

He chatted with many of them and held a long conversation with Bernard Muzeen, camp director of the Ottawa Centretown Club. For several years, Bernie was a staff member of Simcoe Hall, working with the Boys' Club here.

The Prince recalled his camping experience in the Australian bush and laughed about his blistered hands from chopping wood.

"Christian gentleman" banker retires

By Jo Aldwinckle

"He treated everyone in the manner of a Christian gentleman," was the crowning accolade attributed to Herman Pincombe, savings manager of the Main Branch of the Royal Bank of Canada in Oshawa, who is retiring at the end of this month.

The tribute paid by Branch Manager W.D. Dobson, was one of many expressed at a testimonial dinner at Oshawa Golf Club on Saturday night, at which the guest of honor was presented with a set of matched luggage and Royal Bank stock.

On behalf of the staff and former staff members, the presentation was made by Miss Marion Davenport and Mrs. Ada Musgrave.

Mr Dobson traced Herman Pincombe's banking career from the time he started as a young man at Mount Brydges, February 1, 1929; his various transfers, Thamesford, Appin, London, and Barrie, until he came to Oshawa in 1941. After four years of army service, he returned to Oshawa and "in his 29 years here has exemplified all that is good in a savings manager.

"He has contributed greatly to the success of former managers, Rap Huestis, Arthur Hill, "Sandy" Cross and Sam Donnelly and I have never had to worry over his accuracy or his department. He never lost his temper, or had an altercation with or complaint from a customer. He has shown concern for his staff and his customers and sincere sympathy in the handling of estates."

Other friends present to wish Mr. and Mrs. Pincombe health and happiness in the years ahead were Ben Bailey who spoke of Mr. Pincombe's valuable assistance as a member of the session of Simcoe Street United Church and Jack Snyder who thanked him for his dedicated service as treasurer since 1958 of Parkwood Lodge AF and AM.

Miss Beryl Bassingthwaite, director of the White Cross Centre for the Ontario Mental Health Association, thanked both Mr. and Mrs. Pincombe for their work on the board of volunteers.

Words of wisdom on retirement were happily expressed by former Royal Bank manager Mark Roenigk, now residing in Bowmanville, his original home, after retiring from the Royal Bank's Main Office at Portage and Main, Winnipeg.

"I was one of the first tellers in the Royal Bank in Oshawa," he said. "That was in 1910 when the bank was situated at the corner of King and Simcoe Streets, where the Laura Secord shop now stands "

John Vinovich, personnel manager of the District General Manager's office, brought greetings and read a letter of good wishes from A.G. Halliwell, supervisor of personnel, Toronto.

A colleague in banking and an army "buddy", Kenneth Holt, now manager of the Royal Bank at Linden, Ontario, came with his wife for "Herm's send-off".

In his thanks to all "Herm" reminisced about early days in Oshawa, the changes in the staff, the premises and the working hours.

"I shall miss the office and all its associations" he said. Lillian and I will not be leaving Oshawa; we have too many close friends here and I hope to maintain an active interest in community affairs."

junior section there was a fine array of baking, pies, tarts, muffins, cupcakes and cookies.

If the home preserving section was smaller, the handicraft section was larger. Modern living affords more time for hobbies

Members of the Senior Citizens Centre had an interesting display including a footstool covered in green and gold tapestry, a handsome ecru crochet tablecloth and a fruit basket cleverly made from popsicle sticks

There was a section for fancy candles, tooled leather and millinery as well as the perennial quilts and embroidered pillow cases.

Also new were the decorated waste-baskets and tissue boxes in matching sets and a fast-growing handicraft, liquid embroidery. As usual, there was a large display of expert knitting and crochet.

Queen of the exhibits was a large doll dressed in Ukrainian national costume, a beauty.

There were some fine specimens, mostly from Bowmanville, in the flower show, along with some healthy wheat, hay, oats and barley.

Among the vegetables were some mighty good Irish Cobbler potatoes and Spanish onions.

In Old MacDonald's Farm city kids were having their first look at a nanny-goat and her real kids. The pony and colt responded to the children's voices but the moke in the corner looked rather forlorn. Perhaps he knew that a sign on his pen read "Donkey for Sale"

WEDDING GUESTS

Among the Toronotonians who were guests are the Hughes-Crookenden wedding in Chester Cathedral July 18, were Judge and Mrs. Neil C. Fraser, formerly of Oshawa.

The bride, nee Jane Crookenden, is the elder daughter of Lieut.-General Sir Napier and the Hon. Lady Crookenden of Chester. The bride and bridegroom, Sam Hughes, met last year in Vancouver where she was visiting and he was playing cricket with the Toronto Green Mantles. His father, Mr. Justice S. H. S. Hughes, is a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario and his grandfather was Sir Sam Hughes of Lindsay, minister of militia in the Borden Government.

After a honeymoon in the Barbados the newlyweds will live in Toronto.

SHORT TAKES

BID REJECTED

A low bid for the city's new police building was rejected by the architects after having been approved by the board of control and city council. Architect D. G. Hallford said his firm had rejected a bid by Noren Construction Ltd. of Weston for $2,614,567 because the tender did not conform to contract specifications. Second-low bidder Eaglewood Construction Ltd. of Hamilton will now undertake the project for $2,635,000.

MILITIA

About 130 members of the Ontario Regiment's student militia are roughing it at present in the northern regions of the province. The unit left Oshawa Friday for a week of military exercises and drill.

An Oshawa construction worker, Giovanni Mastracci, 23, was killed last Friday in a fall at the Bell Tower construction site at the Oshawa Shopping Plaza. Mastracci, an Italian immigrant, came to Canada four years ago and had lived in Oshawa for two years.

COMPLETE 70's

GM last week completed its 1970 model production with 816 Chevelle-Chevrolet models and 1,392 trucks.

Moment of surprise. Miss Oshawa, Roxanne McKenzie, was as surprised as all beauty queens are when their big moment arrives. From left on stage on the official opening night of the 1970 Oshawa Fair are contestants: Una D. Dart, Colleen McDermaid, Miss McKenzie and Mary Pearce.

He wants to fight

Brian deserted because they wouldn't let him fight in Vietnam

Looking over an album he obtained following basic training in the United States Army is Brian Evans, an Oshawa resident who wants to get to one of the battle zones in the world.

Legend has it that the word snafu was coined by a United States soldier during the Second World War from taking the first letters from the words in the phrase: Situation normal, all fouled up.

If so, the soldier would be happy to learn that his description of the U.S. military still fits. Brian Evans, a young Oshawa man, will attest to that.

It seems that ever since Brian was a boy, he has wanted to fight. Not a fight of the fisticuffs variety, mind you. He has always wanted to take part in formal battle.

"Ever since I can remember, I've made a study of military tactics," he said in a recent interview. "I think it's a real art and for years I've wanted to get involved."

His love for the military saw him join the Oshawa militia at 16, then the Royal Canadian Air Force and finally the United States Army. It's this latter organization against which Brian would use the word snafu — and expressions a mite saltier.

Despite the fact that in basic training and simulated jungle warfare he got top marks, the army refused when he asked — actually begged — to be shipped to Viet Nam.

"All the friends I had made since enlisting went and many of them didn't want to. Here I was anxious to go and they absolutely refused."

Actually, his top marks in jungle warfare, unarmed combat and parachute training were his downfall.

"They put me in strategic," he said. "They made me an instructor in jungle warfare and I hated it. I even wrote a letter to the president, but the defence department intercepted it and told me they'd give every consideration to my request."

Brian says he spent many long sessions with his superiors trying to convince them that a soldier should be allowed to fight while they hammered at him with the counter-argument that a soldier's first duty was to obey orders.

Finally, totally disillusioned with the American military, he headed north. If he ever goes back to the United States, he could be arrested for desertion although he doesn't think he'd be convicted.

"As far as I'm concerned, I signed a contract to go to Viet Nam and they didn't live up to this contract," he says.

WHY TO VIETNAM?

Why this obsession with going to Viet Nam when thousands of Americans are invading Canada to avoid a similar fate?

"First of all, I believe the United States belongs in Viet Nam," he answers. "They were asked to send military aid and they did. I couldn't fight in a war unless I believed what I was fighting for.

"Also, I wsn't afraid of getting hurt over there because of the training I'd had in the forces here and in the States. I figure the guys there get killed because they don't know what they're doing."

Among those killed are four friends Brian made while taking basic training in the U.S. Army. He feels rather bitter about the fact that they did not wanting to be there while he sat back home with opposite feelings.

Once back in Oshawa, he faced the wrath of Canadians who don't believe the war in Viet Nam is right.

"Word spread around about me and I got calls from a lot of nasty people. My mother did too. She had people telling her her son was a murderer."

Still not content to sit around while others were fighting in battles around the world, Brian tried to become a mercenary for the Biafran government in last year's Nigerian war.

"I couldn't find anyone who could tell me how to go about it. I even contacted the Red Cross, but they were shocked and told me they had nothing to do with such things.

Finally, he got in touch with someone who told him he would have to go to Spain to get hired. Since he wasn't able to raise the money to get there before the war ended, he had to forget about that front.

But he isn't discouraged. He figures there are some 32 combat areas around the world at the moment and he hopes some day to be in one of them.

His plans at the moment are to try to get into the journalism course at Durham College and from there work himself into the position of war correspondent.

"That would be fantastic," he says. "I could really write about what was going on with my background."

The night shift

There's a good variety of entertainment in Oshawa for those planning on staying in town this long week-end.

The Plaza Theatre is showing for the final week, Airport. Don't be one of the few to miss it.

"That Woman" and "Weekend Wives" is now playing at the Odeon Theatre to all persons 18 years of age and over.

Two handsome men, Charlton Heston and James Franciscus are starring in Beneath The Planet of the Apes, at the Regent Theatre. Tentatively scheduled for the weekend is Walt Disney's Boatnik.

Tomorrow's your last chance to see Woodstock at the Marks Theatre. You'll either love it or hate it.

That ever popular, Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid is still playing at the Oshawa Drive-In. Also on the same bill is Prudence and the Pill with David Niven and Deborah Kerr.

Hotels

Enjoy Bambie, an exotic dear, and her group featured at the Cadillac Hotel.

The Central Hotel is hosting The Rainvilles until August 8 to take your mind off the hot weather.

A group from Niagara Falls, the Journeymen Duo, is now appearing at the Carousel Inn.

Harry's Hideaway in the Genosha Hotel presents the Townsmen Four playing the Best in Rock and Roll for the young and young-at-heart.

The Bud Roberts Trio is still playing at the Blue Horse Lounge this week-end. For those who dig country and western, Bud Roberts is the man to see.

Held over for the second week to a very appreciative audience, Lynda Lane and Larry Lee and the Leisures entertain at the Spruce Villa Hotel in Whitby.

If your music taste is a little bit of everything, enjoy the Millionaires at Jim's Stage Door in the Whitby Hotel.

At the movies

Al Ruddy, producer of THE GODFATHER is feeling the heat of what its like to be "keeper of the flame."

"People are constantly calling me up with casting suggestions. Actors I have admired for years are begging me for the lead. It has put me in a difficult position because I have made up my mind to cast all unknowns. No part will be played by any actor who has an instantly recognizable face," says Ruddy hoping to end the speculation about Anthony Quinn, Ernest Borgnine and all the others.

"I want to make a small, terrifying movie. The book is the star, not the actors. I want the audience to see real people, almost as if they are looking through a window."

Artistic Director, Roy Higgins, has announced the final casting of the two opening shows of the three play season The Orono Youth Festival.

Cast in "Dark of the Moon" (the weird and fascinating folk tale based on the haunting ballad of "Barbara Allen") are:

Sheila Jourard from Belleville, Cheryl Brown, Andrea Ewart, Hermine Kerekes, Ian and Bill Peters from Bowmanville, Keith Allin and Brian Miklos from Newcastle, Jim Westheuser from Newtonville, Marilyn Burnett, Monica Connolly, Rossi Grose and Herschel Rosen from Oshawa, Stephen Campbell and Linda Cornish from Port Hope and Mary Love and Val Watson from Toronto.

Previously announced in leading roles were Doug Luxton and Murray Twist from Bowmanville, Candy Storks from Newcastle and Philip Akin from Oshawa. Higgins directs the opening show of the season with Herschel Rosen of Oshawa as Assistant Director and Peter Hicks of Belleville as Stage Manager.

Cast in "Antigone" (the modern adaptation of the Greek Legend of useless civil wars and senseless suicides) are:

Stephen Bodley from Belleville, Andrea Ewert and Mike Gilhooley from Bowmanville, Kathy and Janet Lovkin and Leslie Miklos from Newcastle, Monica Connoly from Oshawa and Stephen Cambell from Port Hope. Previously announced in leading roles were Peter Hicks of Belleville, Susan Goldie of Peterborough and Val Watson of Toronto. Charles Ewert of Bowmanville directs with Anne Elibeck of Toronto as Stage Manager.

Costumes and sets for both shows were designed by Michael Eagan, who is a resident instructor and designer for the National Theatre School in Montreal. And, as anybody from Orono will tell you, "if you want to see something sensational, drop into the Orono Arena and have a look at those costume sketches". Both shows will be a visual treat to the eye with their dazzling array of colours and imaginative design.

Now that the Box Office is officially open (Noon to 9 PM daily except Friday), the first two plays well into rehearsal and fully cast, Artistic Director Higgins is smiling more often, even though the pressure is mounting as the grand opening of the season draws closer. This is his third Youth Theatre Company. Although he has directed and appeared in plays for 11 years throughout Canada and the U.S., Youth Theatre is his first love.

Subscriptions are available until Aug 20, at a saving of 20% for three plays. Curtain 8:15 PM Tues. Wed. Thurs, Sat. & Sun.

Hedda and Shylock at Stratford

By Jo Aldwinckle

Henrik Ibsen author of "Hedda Gabler" revolutionized the subject of the drama when he brought to the stage frank, penetrating discussions of human relationships, bound by lies, pretensions and hypocrisy.

He brought reality and deep emotion to a world smothered by fantasy and flowery sentiment. No one had written quite like this before the 19th century. Beneath the ordinary manners of his characters lay age-old energies and desires which are as vital today as when he drew them in the 1870's.

The title role of Hedda Gabler at the Stratford Festival is being intuitively translated by Irene Worth, one of England's most accomplished actresses. Hedda Gabler is a strange, conniving woman, bored with existence.

She schemes to manipulate the lives of others. Her seeming kindness is a mask for her ruthlessness. Surrounded by a strong cast, Irene Worth is a superb Hedda.

Opposite her Gordon Jackson has developed the kindly, unwordly character of George Tesman, Hedda's unloved husband. We suffer for him — poor George. This is great characterization.

A delicate piece of acting, sweet as a posy of Parma violets, is Anne Ives' portrayal of Aunt Julia. Miss Ives' career in the theatre started in 1906 and includes appearances with the Irish Players, summer stock, radio and television. She is everybody's genteel aunt.

Donald Davis fills the role of Judge Brack comfortably and Leo Ciceri conveys the hopelessness of a pawn in Hedda's hands.

Devoted, long-suffering and despised by Hedda were Thea Elvstead (played by Gillian Martell) and Berta, the family servant, (Christine Bennett), gentle foils to Hedda's turbulence.

Martin Kinch who directed "Reap the Wild Wind" for OSHAWA Little Theatre, was assistant to Director Peter Gill in this new version by Christopher Hampton.

The Merchant of Venice was played in its entirety in the classic style, directed by Jean Gascon. The masquers, maidens and magnificos were nothing short of what we have come to expect from Desmond Heeley's costuming and design.

Donald Davis is a proud Shylock, shrewd and callow, with heart only for his daugher and his ducats. Rather than engendering hatred, the actor brings us to pity Shylock in his loneliness.

Blonde and blue-eyed Maureen O'Brien is the most doll-like Portia to date, but witty withal and more than a match for Shylock when she comes to court, dressed as a young man, to defend Antonio.

Jane Casson as Nerissa is a quick-witted waiting woman to Portia and the attendant damsels are a delight to the eye.

James Blendick supplies the comic relief and Bernard Behrens gives his usual sensitive performance as Old Gobbo.

Leo Ciceri, Leon Pownall, Joel Kenyon, Kenneth Welsh, Barry MacGregor and Stephen Markle head a company of Canadians to be proud of.

Cooperation combined with coincidence cuts death toll

Public co-operation and coincidence have combined to keep the traffic fatality record much better this year than last.

This is the opinion of a representative of the Whitby Detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police, commenting on the fact that mid-way through July there were four accidents while 22 persons had died in traffic in the area by that time last year.

The police spokesman said enforcement procedures are the same this year as last so he would have to give the credit to the public.

"Of course, fatalities seem to come in cycles with no apparent reason for it," he said. "I've seen detachments go for several years without an accident and then get eight or 10 the following years."

Organist in concert

Thursday, July 30 and Aug. 6, through the courtesy of the Thomas House of Music, Art De'Nyke, professional organist will play a series of popular concerts on the Electric Organ from the McLaughlin Band Shell.

Kathy Branton a pupil of Mr. De'Nyke, will also appear on the same program. This is the third season of organ music from the shell which has been well received while the Civic Band takes a two week vacation.

Concerts will start at 8:15 P.M.

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

It's time to set the record straight. This I do only after a great deal of thought and research. It concerns the amount of publicity given to a Toronto cable company — to remain nameless. If you followed reports, the impression is they are doing more for their cable subscribers than any other company in the world.

It seems that every other day one of the Toronto dailies is blasting out words of praise for the wonderful job of local origination. After reading these reports the viewer gets the impression that the other cable companies are asleep at the switch. Or at least the others haven't got off the ground.

Such is not the case, not by a long shot. Humble old Oshawa is cranking out more programming than the nameless Toronto group. As a matter of fact some weeks have seen up to 40 hours of programming from Aardvarks to Zebras. Even the local programming is versatile. There's a travel show, one for people interested in politics, a women's show, the labor scene, news, sports, weather, current events like the "Miles for Millions", regional government, sidewalk sales, the art mart, and the list goes on.

The problem is that we don't have a friend on one of the Toronto dailies that we can lobby into writing articles. But we do have more programming than most cable compnies, and that's not all. We are part of the first Canadian Cable network to be formed that exchanges programs. Shortly, tapes from the four other stations in the network will be pouring in and along with our locally produced tapes this should provide the viewer with good all-around coverage.

September is going to bring the heavy schedule back to Cable Cast 8 with a surprising amount of local talent. The music scene will be covered by the Oshawa Symphony. The Oshawa Skeet Club will hopefully be providing the Outdoors shows, and still in the planning stage are shows dealing with gardening and landscaping, the stock market and the economic state of the country, an Oshawa Police report, and many more shows designed to fill the function of informing and entertaining at the local level.

SINGERS FOR ALL SEASONS

Dot and Morris Rainville are singers for ALL SEASONS but it may be that this season is one in which the talented "Mr. and Mrs. Country Music" should blossom more than ever. August has been declared "Country Music Month" by Jim Maher, so join the stampede to the Gold Rush.

Dot and Morris have been labelled as "Mr. and Mrs. Personality" ever since they entered the field of music. Born and raised in the Nickel Capital they spent many years doing radio and TV work, and became regulars on the CKTV Ranch Party Show. Their bubbling enthusiasm and unique talent keep capacity audiences coming back for more. Their records appear consistently on the top Canadian Charts.

Chronicles of Osh

saying, behold, the land of Osh and those who dwell therein are like unto a man without focals that by and who lives in a paradise by his own self.

4. Moreover did it whirl, saying, behold the land of Whit, built by the Whitites and ruled over by the Pharaoh of Whit shall go on forever, and it shall be a mighty land, and its strength is just beginning to come into itself

5. And there were many in the land of Osh who not only resented being labelled a swine with bubbles of an unbecoming nature, but who also questioned the wisdom displayed by the Pharaoh of Whit in making so clear unto the people the weakness of the reasoning of the henchmen of Whit in their attempts to remain on their own.

6. Now in the same latter part of the seventh month of the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy, it came to pass that the phare of Osh brought out Oshites, and Whitites and Bowmans and many who lived afar off, to partake of the odor of stale flesh of what was called hamburger in those days, and to ride big round things that went around in circles and to watch the tillers of the soil of the land show their oneupmanship when it came to the horses and cattle of the day.

7. And there were many who said the phare of Osh was about to go into orbit, which was a favorite saying of the people in the year one thousand nine hundred and seventy

8. But many an Oshite and even among the Whitites and Bowmans there were some, missed out on the greatest which the land of Osh brought down unto its phare, in that it presented for all the people to see its choice young maidens.

9. And the maidens appeared on the first night of the phare of Osh and pranced before the people gathered together, yea especially before the scribes in the land of Osh and those who spoke with much air and those who showed the people of the land of Osh and some of the Bowmans some of the things that were to come to pass on the toob called boob.

10. And the maidens of Osh showed themselves with and without the garments of the street, the beach and the evening, but mostly with, and the people clapped, and those who sat in judgement clapped and finally there was brought before the people gathered together at the phare of Osh she who was found to be the pharest of the seven who had been chosen, and a crown of imitation pearls was put upon her head and she was taken onto the place of gamble in the land of Osh where she did not roll dice or other, but received garments and other things beautiful.

11. And the maiden of Osh thus chosen had spoken unto the judges of maidens, saying, behold I wish to be a scribe like one of you, and this thing appeared to have gone down big, so to speak with those among the judges who were scribes in the land of Osh, as there were Sabe of the toob, and Gibross, who was also an elder of the land of Osh and who spoke with much air, and who was among the judges like unto a Solomon in that he had the final say when it came to adding up total votes brought out by the judges, and there was the woman Vick, who taught the young maidens of Osh how to walk and how to gird their loins or not gird them, and how to sit meaningfully on a seat, and there were the women of Osh who wrote for all the women of Osh who read the Tymes of Osh and the chief scribe of the week of Osh who confided to the chronicles, saying, this was the most difficult of tasks ever having faced him.

12. And among those who watched the judges of Osh crown the maiden of Osh there were many who murmured amongst themselves, saying, behold, what the hell do these guys know about girls and beautiful maidens and wherewithall to make their choice.

13. And it was pondering upon these things that the Chronicler of Osh got stuck and left off at this the thirteenth verse of his umpteenth chapter of the Chronicles of Osh.

SPORTS SHORTS

HOUDAILLE

Houdaille won their three games and captured the tournament title in the Mormora Invitational Softball Tournament played at Oshawa, Saturday. The final game of the tournament was an extra-inning thriller that ended 1-0. Larry Marshall pitched his second win for Houdaille to claim the day's honor.

REDMEN DEFEATED

The Brantford Warriors defeated the Brooklin Redmen 23-11 Friday in the Ontario Lacrosse Association Senior A division. Larry Lloyd and Ron Liscombe of Brooklin, defending Mann cup champions, scored three times each in a losing effort.

TENNIS TROUBLES

The Oshawa Tennis Club dropped three of five points in a Kawartha Mixed League outing against the Quaker Tennis Club in Peterborough last week. Carol Dodsworth and Jeanette Kilgour picked up one point for Oshawa in the women's doubles while Ron Cox and Ted Gauder got the other one.

GAELS LOSE

History repeated itself last week as the St. Catharines Gas-O-Ramas defeated the Oshawa Gaels 11-10 in the OLA Junior A lacrosse series. Just the week before, St. Kitts had won another cliffhanger by a 10-9 margin against the Gaels.

GIRLS WIN

Oshawa Paving defeated John Weiss in an Oshawa Recreation Women's Softball League game Thursday. The Pavers proved themselves twice as proficient as their opponents, registering a 20-10 win.

TWO VICTORIES

The Garrard Road All-Stars handed Peterborough double losses last week, defeating them 14-9 Thursday. The All-Stars had beaten the Peterborough team the previous night as well. Peterborough won the third game 12-5.

RUNNERS-UP

Al Baudner and Dave Smith of Oshawa were edged out of the juvenile championship in the Ontario Golf Association Friday by a Toronto pair, Benny Kern and Steve Adams. There were 38 teams in the competition.

COMES FOURTH

Dale Neil came fourth overall in both heats of the modified and production sports car races at Mosport on Sunday. He also came second and third in his class. Another Oshawa area racer who made a good showing was Bill Hapgood of Ajax who took 17th overall and a first in Class F in the first production sports car race.

COLTS WIN

With Eric Pearce, skip, Bill Matthews and Pete Maximuik, won the Eastern Ontario Zone of Provincial Lawn Bowling Association colts playoffs Saturday at Kingston. The Pearce team will represent the zone in the upcoming Ontario finals to be held at Agincourt.

CHOO LOSES

Choo broke even in their two Eastern Ontario Baseball Association bantam league games over the weekend by dropping a 14-6 game to the Bantams of Belleville Saturday, and winning 7-6 over the same team Sunday afternoon.

LEGIONNAIRES

Oshawa Senior Legionnaires are trying for first place in the Eastern Ontario Baseball Association intermediate league after a 7-4 win over the Bowmanville Electrons. Legionnaires joining Port Hope and Bowmanville in the race for first place.

A 20-year-old Kingston sharp-shooter won the Ontario Junior Men's Single Junior men's championship played at Oshawa Saturday. John McFarland defeated 20-year-old Steve Segal of Toronto 6-4, and 6-3.

Agility run held

Oshawa Recreation Department held an Agility Run at Radio Community Area. Twenty people from each of the nine Community Areas participated in four different events.

The good weather, along with the large attendance of participants, contributed to the success of this Summer's first City Wide Special Event. Each of the Community Area's entered in such events as Blanket Roll, Tire Step, Crawl 'N Clib, Shoe Kick.

The final point standing showed Dr. C.F. Cannon (Lake vista) Community Area to be the most agile in the events as they accumulated a score of 2127.3 and were declared Agility Run Champions. The other Community Areas in order of standings were: Fernhill (2nd) 2295, Kingside (3rd) 2372, Connaught 2433.3, Sunnyside 2495, Grandview 2500, North Oshawa 2629, Woodview 2675, Radio 2924.

The next City Wide event will be Games Day which will take place at Alexandra Park on Wednesday, August 5th, 1970.

Second last long weekend

Most Oshawa residents will be taking advantage of the second-last long weekend of the summer next Monday.

Aside from Labor Day, when most families are frantically preparing for Junior's first day or return to school, the Civic holiday Aug. 3 is the last chance everyone has to laze around the house or cottage in the summer sun.

Mayor Bruce Mackey has declared the day a public holiday and consequently city offices will be closed. There will be no garbage collection either and those affected are reminded to set out their refuse on Tuesday for pick-up.

While there is no bylaw stating so, most downtown and shopping plaza stores will be closed for the holiday. There will be no home milk delivery but the corner jug milk stores will feature business as usual.

One drug store within the Oshawa association of pharmacies will be open, but as one druggist put it, "there will be one or two maverick stores open as well".

All plants and offices of General Motors will be closed for the holiday as will the banks, post office and provincial offices.

It will have to be a plan-ahead weekend for Oshawa's thirsty residents as the Brewers' Retail and Liquor Control Board stores will be closed. Beverage rooms and cocktail lounges, however, will be open.

For those whose interests are literary rather than liquid, they too will have to stock up ahead of time since the McLaughlin Public Library will also be closed.

Handyman's corner

When painting a window sash or the putty around the glass, it's difficult to avoid getting a few paint spatters on the pane. The Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association suggests there are two correct times to remove those spatters — when the paint is still fresh or when it is hard. Keep a clean cloth handy to wipe off any paint at once. But if you don't take this step immediately, or if the paint is too close to soft putty to risk wiping off, wait a few days. Then it's easy to scrape off with a single-edged razor blade. When the paint spatter is partly dry, it smears and won't come off easily with either a cloth or razor blade.

VARNISH

A coating or two of clear varnish will protect painted floors from wear and tear. A clear urethane which resists abrasion is a particularly good choice.

GLAZE

Antiquing kits are one of the most up-to-date wasy to add "instant age" to furniture. For extra-easy and effective application of the final glaze coating, use plastic garment bags, suggests the Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association. Cut the bags into pieces approximately two feet suqare. Then apply the glaze to the furniture surface with a paint brush. Now wipe the glaze with the plastic until you achieve just the right effect. Plastic bags make clean-up easy — just throw them away when you're through.

SAFETY FIRST

When working with any finish that contains solvents, use caution. Always work in a well-ventilated room with doors and windows open. This will reduce the chance of solvent fumes accumulating and being ignited. Don't smoke while working with solvents; put out any pilot lights in nearby stoves and furnaces; and, don't use electrical equipment unless it is the non-sparking type.

WINDOW PAINTING

Before painting your windows, remove all loose putty and coat the wood recesses with house paint primer, then apply new putty. The Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association suggests painting in this order: First, the members, which divide the window glass, then the frame, and finally the trim, sill and apron.

Two on a bicycle is one too many, says the Ontario Motor League. Ride your bicycle alone, and observe all the traffic signals and signs.

Atomic Sentence to 'go union' in a few years

By Tom Douglas

There is a pretty fair musical group in the Oshawa-Whitby area that will have to wait nine years before it can get booked into a local night spot.

Both the singer and the organ player are only 12 years old. For that matter, the other three members of the group have just reached the ripe old age of 15.

Billed as The Atomic Sentence, this five-man group has played a number of engagements in the area since they got together about two years ago. Aside from school dances, they have provided the music at Simcoe Hall, Thornton Community Centre and a club on Scugog Island.

They play anything they like from the hit tunes on the radio. Once they decide on the number, they buy the record and play it over and over until they have it right.

This writer attended a practice session held last week at the Whitby home of the leader of the group, Jim Delaney. While my musical talents are restricted to a few dozen choruses of Where Have All The Flowers Gone? played on the ukelele, I know what I like and these youngsters were good.

Joe McIntyre of Whitby, the group's singer, belted out a song with a stage presence that belied the fact that he has yet to become a teen-ager.

Barely visible behind a fair-sized organ was the newest member of the group, Steven Winfield, the other 12-year-old, who is driven in from his Scarborough home by his parents for rehearsals.

"We get together about two or three times a week for practices and that's not even enough," said Jim Delaney, the band's guitar player.

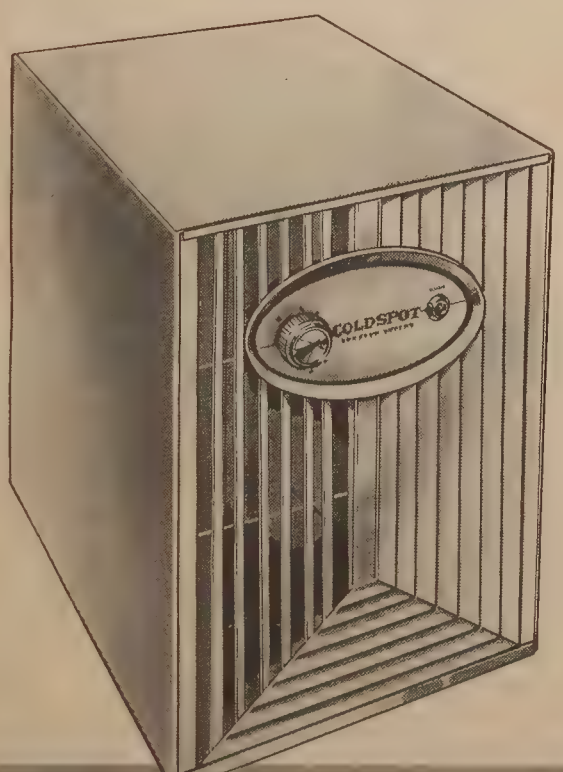
Jim and Joe originated the group one day in Jim's back yard when he was picking at his guitar and Joe started singing along. From then on, they began getting the rest together and finally decided to play for the public.

The Atomic Sentence is the name chosen by these five youths for their rock band. They are, from left, Tom Owen, Joe McIntyre, Larry Wilson, and Jim Delaney, all of Whitby and Steven Winfield of Scarborough.

While Joe picked up singing on his own, Jim and Steve had had considerable formal training in music. The other two members, Tom Owen on bass and Larry Wilson on drums, have also studied music.

There is a sixth member of the group who not only stays out of the limelight, but actually creates it. He is Pete Lofthouse, 15, who is the light man for The Atomic Sentence. He works with strobes and spots and hopes to have two black lights before long.

Each boy has his own plans for the future (Jim for instance would like to be a doctor) but they all would like to continue playing together for a few years anyway.



"In a couple of years, we'll probably turn union and get into the big money," said Jim

1970 - the "bombed-out" year

Mosport to get rock festival after all ?

By Peter Brouwer
editor

Last year was the year of the rock and pop and love festival. This year it's the rock, pop and love festival-bombed-out. Or so it seems.

We've seen it with Mosport where big plans were made at the beginning of the season. We've seen it in Toronto, in Quebec and in umpteen proposed festivals that flopped south of the border.

The festival planned for Mosport by a couple of Toronto organizers fell flat when a Clarke Township bylaw brought its veto. That bylaw has since been upheld by an Ontario Supreme Court Decision.

Toronto's festival came off, somewhat, but it appeared to have brought more gnashing of teeth than love.

As for the Quebec effort, it petered out last Sunday as a big disappointment to thousands of kids who had spent their savings to get to it. (It was also a disappointment, no doubt, to the thousands who didn't spend and helped ruin what according to the organizers could have been a good thing.)

And now we're going to have one at Mosport after all?

At the time of writing, the proposed "event" at Mosport is very much on.

But it's not really a carnival, or a festival or a love-in or something like that. At least, not according to the way it's being billed. What's coming off at Mosport this coming weekend (what may or may not come off, that is) is the first annual "Strawberry Cup Trophy Race,"

From where the strawberries?

Think back.

To Strawberry Fields.

Strawberry Fields was the big "international carnival of sound and freedom visit free North America". It was advertised in the New York Times of July 26, to be held at Moncton, New Brunswick, Canada. "Three days of love, sun and sound," the ad said, listing a dozen top name bands for an appearance August 7-9.

SHORT TAKES

CARNIVAL QUEEN. Julianne Le Von was chosen as queen os the weekend's County Town Carnival in Whitby. Miss Le Von and her two princesses, Linda Gibson and Sally Ann Garratt, reigned over the many events that marked the three-day affair.

TOP WAGES

Oshawa's municipal laborers are the highest-paid in Canada following their recent 18 per cent wage increase. This fact was revealed by Gilbert Levine, research director for the Canadian Union of Public Employees, who said that Oshawa is a high-wage city and the 225 outside workers receiving the pay hike needed it to maintain parity with industrial workers.

ADMITS GUILT

Stephen Gordon Taylor, 23, of 57 Colborne Street East in Oshawa pleaded guilty Friday to two charges of conveying false messages. Taylor was arrested following two bomb threats July 22 and 23 in which a caller said explosions would occur at City Hall. The second call led to evacuation of the building. Taylor has been remanded for three weeks for sentencing.

VIPs PRESENT

A number of local dignitaries were on hand Friday to welcome visitors from Longueuil, Quebec, Whitby's twin municipality, for the start of the Whitby County Town Carnival. The guests were welcomed by Ed Broadbent, MP, Oshawa-Whitby, Bill Newman, MPP, Ontario South, Mayor Desmond Newman, Reeve Tom Edwards, Councillor Dr. Kenneth Hobbs and Ontario County Warden Robert Timbers.

HALF AND QUARTER

Two Oshawa couples were honoured recently for milestones in their married life. Mr. and Mrs. High L. Gray of Oshawa Boulevard North were feted on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary. Telegrams of congratulations were received from Prime Minister Trudeau, Ontario Premier John Robarts and Governor-General and Mrs. Michener. Mr. and Mrs. John Banbula of Olive Avenue recently celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. Mr. Banbula's brother, Rev. Marian Banbula of Poland, was special guest.

COUPLE HONORED

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Woodward of Whitby were honored Friday evening for their part in originating the Whitby Carnival five years ago. They were presented with a medal bearing the motto 'Love and Mankind' by Mayor Desmond Newman at Friday's welcoming ceremonies for visitors from Longueuil, Quebec, Whitby's twin municipality.

BLOOD NEEDED

An urgent appeal from the Red Cross has gone out to Oshawa residents to attend Thursday's blood donor clinic at St. Gregory's Auditorium from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. and from 6 to 9 p.m. Blood supplies are critically low in the city and several major operations have had to be postponed. A minimum of 550 pints of blood will have to be collected at Thursday's clinic.

Big push for safe cycling

There's a big push on this summer for safe bicycle riding on Oshawa streets

Police and recreation departments have combined in a series of safe bicycle sessions at the 33 parks in Oshawa where summer play programs are held.

The objective is to combine skillful riding with sound training in traffic rules, says Const. Tom Holmes of the safety bureau, Oshawa Police Department.

From each city playground, four competitors will be picked for the city-wide competitions to be held at the Civic Auditorium, August 11.

"Sne dyour child to the playground," advises Const. Holmes. "It's an ideal ay for him or her to learn to ride safety on our streets."

John Tehern, age seven and Connie Schell, supervisor of the Dr. Cannon Community Recreation Area help Const. Tom Holmes of the Oshawa Police Department promote the upcoming bicycle rodeo at the Civic Auditorium, August 11.

OAPADS STUDY

New boundaries for Oshawa and area

EDITOR'S NOTE: Last week we discussed Oshawa's disagreement with the proposal in the third discussion paper of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development study that Oshawa and Whitby not be allowed to amalgamate. This week, we look at just what boundaries OAPADS would set for regional government.

The first recommendation on regional government in the 600-page paper concerns the west boundary of the Oshawa region.

OAPADS suggests that it follow the Rouge River from Lake Ontario to the intersection of the Rouge with the present east boundary of Metropolitan Toronto.

"From that point northward the boundary (should) be determined in the light of more information about the probable locations of the east-west parkway corridor and the proposed new urban centre of Cedarwood," suggests the paper.

It is recommended that the north boundary of the region contain initially all of Ontario County north of the basic study area plus Cartwright Township.

"But if and when another region is established containing Orillia, Rama and Mara should at that time join the other region," the report states.

OAPADS would have the east boundary of the region follow the present east boundary of Darlington Township.

"But if and when a regional government arrangement involving the remainder of Northumberland and Durham is proposed, the eastern boundary should be re-examined to determine if some or all of the Newcastle-Clarke area should be added to the Oshawa region."

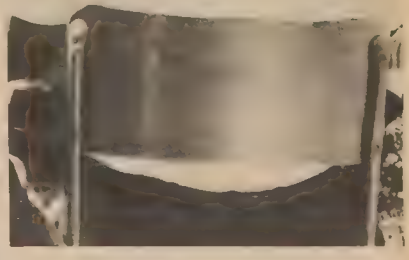
To compensate the remainder of the United Counties for any financial loss resulting from the transfer of Bowmanville, Darlington and Cartwright to the Oshawa region, the study suggests payment of a special transitional grant.

"This grant should cover the full amount of any net loss in the first year, and be phased out over a five-year period through equal annual reductions."

It is further suggested that the amount of the net loss should be determined by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

As to the uctual boundaries of the present municipalities, the study recommends first of all that the east limit of Oshawa be moved to the line between lots 26 and 27 in the Township of Darlington, extending from Lake Ontario to the north boundary of the basic study area.

It further suggests that the west boundary of the city follow the present boundary between Oshawa and Whitby and between East Whitby and Whitby, from the lake to the northern edge of the basic study area.



The area comprising Pickering Township, Ajax and Pickering Village, according to the study, should be made into two area municipalities.

"The boundary between the West Pickering municipality and the municipality comprising East Pickering-Ajax-Pickering Village (should) follow the line between Lots 17 and 18 in the Township of Pickering from Lake Ontario northward to the middle of Concession VIII, eastward to the middle of Lot 17 and then northward along the mid-line of Lot 17 to the north boundary of Pickering Township."

Carnival fun for all

Whitby had itself a ball on the long weekend withits annual County Town Carnival. Sandra Neal, 11, and her eight-year-old sister Laura liked the candy floss best (below) and Mrs. Edith Beden, at left was impressed by her courteous attendants Jane Spratt, 14, and Rosemary Engle, 10, St. John Ambulance Cadets who were out in full force to help Fairview Lodge residents enjoy the festivities. The Lions Club train, bottom left, was a big attraction for many, espeically those who shunned the roller coaster.

Bungling a bungling body's abolition

City officials should not be a bit surprised the Ontario Municipal Board hasn't even bothered to consider the Oshawa bylaw that eliminates the Board of Control.

The OMB has often been labelled the "watchdog" of municipal affairs in Ontario. The Board has proven time and again its value in interceding between "the people" and the "municipality" and the "province."

In refusing to even consider Oshawa's bylaw to abolish the Board of Control until it has been properly advertised and the people of Oshawa given a chance to raise their objections following which the OMB might or might not call for a public hearing, Board Chairman J. A. Kennedy is merely following the work pattern usually adopted by his Board.

Why should it take until last week though, to discover this practise of the OMB? Aren't city solicitors supposed to be "up on these things?"

The bylaw was passed in council on July 6, by a 9-6 vote. The Municipal Act is not clear as to the majority needed to pass a bylaw to abolish a board of control. Some members of council held that a simple majority in favor would be sufficient, while others argued that a two-thirds majority was required.

Meanwhile, the weeks go by.

Unless the advertising program starts soon, and a hearing is called shortly after that, we'll all be going to the polls in December to elect yet another Board of Control for yet another two-year term, and it will be because we failed to cope with some of the very red tape we are trying to rid ourselves of.

The current board of control has clearly shown Oshawa would be much better off without its bungling. Now if we can only stop bungling the abolition of this bungling body . . . .

Memo to all slothful, lusty, and mad drivers

Is bad driving a "sin" in the moral sense? Here's what a writer in "The Living Church" has to say about it.

In ancient times the Church classified wrongful human behaviour into "the seven deadly sins." They are today a sound outline of the cause of traffic accidents.

SLOTH, or laziness is the sin that makes a motorist unwilling to take the time to correct mechanical faults in his car. It prevents the taking of simple precautions.

GREED is so obvious a traffic sin that the greedy driver has a specific title — "road hog."

LUST in a sexual sense, produces some accidents through one-armed driving. But lust for speed and excitement is deadlier in traffic.

GLUTTONY, particularly in the use of alcohol, dulls the senses, weakens the reflexes, spoils judgement. It is just as deadly for the drinking pedestrian as the drinking driver.

ENVY is a classic killer. The driver who resents being passed is being moved by envy to behaviour that jeopardizes life.

ANGER is a familiar phenomenon in drivers. The fault in the other driver — real or imagined — stirs resentment and often provokes hazardous response.

PRIDE. Behind every one of these driving sins lies the central sin of pride. People hunger for a sense of importance, strength, power. Once encased in sheet metal, with power responding to the gentle touch of a foot, we find ourselves lifted with a false sense of greatness. Anyone — whether he be other driver, overworked police officer, or even a feeble old lady tottering across the street — who in any way diminishes our exercise of this greatness is a threat to pride.

For a welfare system that's fair and just

A sweeping and long overdue revision of the Canadian welfare system is in the wind at Ottawa.

The cabinet is reported to have agreed on details of a vast reorganization in which most social welfare payments — such as family allowances — will be paid only to the needy. The principal feature of the plan, scheduled for introduction in a White Paper on social welfare in the fall, will be the adoption of means tests. Earnings will determine the amount of welfare plan benefits.

This proposed overhaul of Canadian welfare philosophy away from universality is a drastic one which will constitute a basic change in what it means to be a Canadian and will incur considerable political risk for the Liberal regime. Most people earning middle incomes (possibly, about $10,000 a year) would become ineligible, while the majority of people on small incomes would receive more than they get under the family allowance system now. Abolition of the principle of equality will alienate many middle income voters, but cabinet members are said to be convinced that the country can no longer afford to carry on this type of philosophic luxury.

Actually, the White Paper contemplates scrapping the family allowance plan as we have known it since 1944. In its place, payments would be made to all married couples, whether they have children or not, whose income is less than a fixed amount, possibly between $5,000 and $7,000 a year. The income limit would be increased on a scale depending on the number of children in a family, so that a large family with an income considerably higher than the basic limit would still get the payment.

The present system of family allowances has long been a source of discontent among all classes of Canadians. There is simply no logic in refusing to differentiate between the former prime minister, the multi-millionaire and the pauper. Monies spent in this manner are not in fact or theory doing the job for which they are designated.

In swinging away from universality, the government is headed in the right direction. If it can at the same time effectively measure the needs of welfare recipients and extend economic assistance on the basis of their real requirements, a fair and just welfare system will be established.

Let's start with the complaints department this week. If you smoke and have four or five lighters that won't work, you've probably noticed it too. The penny matches you buy over the counter today are useless. They go out after a very brief flourish, not long enough to light even the longest king size cigaret. One Oshawa tobacconist with whom I discussed this serious problem said it was probably the weather and the hot little hands and pockets that hold the matches. Is this so? Or is the quality of the penny match falling by the wayside?

And that isn't all. It seems more and more restaurant and hotels have discovered they can sell their pennymatches even when they carry, front and back, the establishment's advertisement. That really gets me. There are exceptions. One outstanding one is the Rib Room at the Genosha Hotel where you get, along with your continental style buffet and what have you, continental style matches.

I am willing to prepare a case against the matchmakers which some able lawyer could perhaps bring to a final conclusion, and if you're one of the victims, please drop me a line. What is needed is more devastating evidence.

One tree got away

A week ago tonight we saw grandpa and grandma off at Toronto International Airport for the return trip home. And this time the airport crowds were even bigger than they were four weeks ago when a number of charter flights arrived at approximately the same time. The hot sticky weather didn't improve things very much, and if you know Dutchmen like I know them, you'll know they're an impatient lot who "push" when they're trapped in a crowd. They cannot possibly stand in line and await their turn. They must heave and push until the man who finally has his turn at whatever he's doing is nearly squashed between his destination and the others who are trying to get to the same spot. (That's one thing I'll say about the North American — he has more patience standing in line.)

Anyway, the folks' baggage this time weighed in with exactly two pounds to go, not counting the handbaggage, which you're really supposed to weigh in with your suitcases, but which my folks don't, because they're usually about 15 pounds or so over, as a result of which also they're often sent back, once they're just about to step aboard. However, not this time.

And in the handbag, carefully wrapped and disguised in copies of THIS WEEK was the big prize. At the time of writing I still don't know whether grandpa was stopped by customs and thrown in jail for smuggling in a plant which some customs officer might suspect was a marijuana plant or something just as exotic. But he probably wasn't, for he has an honest face, and he can look a customs man straight in the eye, while clutching under his left arm a flight bag containing a Maple Leaf tree.

Of course, this was a small one. All the same, by the time you read this, the Maple will be flourishing, hopefully, in a garden somewhere in the Netherlands. There's enough Oshawa soil with it, so it won't have too difficult a time to get used to the environment. Actually, I think it's a tremendous gesture, what with all the tulip bulbs that Queen Juliana keeps shipping over here . . . .

Plesman's airline

Meanwhile, I've never flown anywhere on a charter, and from all the reports I hear, it seems that's one of the finest ways to go, really. Not only does one save a bundle of fare money, but the service, at least on this recent one my parents were on, was fantastic. Would you believe there was free champagne for everyone . . . .

There are no regularly scheduled KLM flights into Toronto, but I'm sure it does every Dutchman's heart good to see the silver and blue striped DC-8's land in this part of Canada. the KLM, which stands for Konigklijke Luchtyaart Maatschappij, which stands for Royal Airline Company, which is called by KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, has a special spot with every Dutchman.

When I was a kid I had never heard of Hoppalong Cassidy or the like. My hero was Albert Plesman, the Dutchman who started KLM and who made this airline of a "little people" succeed to a giant. KLM celebrated its 50th anniversary last year. Anthony van Kampen wrote a book about Plesman "the daddy" of the KLM and grandpa brought a copy of it as a gift on his last visit. It's a great story about a great man.

Sir William P. Hildred, director general of the International Air Transport Association summed Plesman up this way: "Like the hero of Greek tragedy, everything about Albert Plesman was a little larger than life."

We all need more Plesman's.

Drug Scene

Mood-modifying drugs — sedatives, tranquilizers and stimulants — account for 25 per cent of the prescriptions issued by Toronto doctors, says a drug merchandizing magazine. The business publication quotes a study by the Ontario Addiction Research Foundation.

Women are the major recipients of such medication, of which 44 per cent are sedatives and hypnotics, mainly barbiturates, and 16 per cent stimulants, mainly amphetamines, the study reports.

The new BA

The bachelor's degree will disappear by the year 2000, and its curriculum will be assumed by an expanded and lengthened secondary school structure. This prediction is made in the educational publication, Canadian University & College, reporting on a recent research study.

After 14 years of high school, says the study, the student would proceed to a period of advanced education, with no fixed time limit imposed; the master's degree or some other intermediate degree would probably be retained to mark the end of a full-time stage of advanced education.

The bachelor's degree, says the report, "will, after a long and bitter rear-guard action, disappear."

Early retirement a myth?

"Look before you leap into early retirement," warns Jim Vernon, editor of "Plant Administration/Engineering."

Looking at the problem from the company management viewpoint, he studied the effect of early retirements on productivity.

"Would it really make way for new men coming up," he asked, "or would it merely hurt rather than help a company's economic position?" He noted the pressures are building steadily for more time off, a shorter work week, earlier retirement.

But Vernon says industry should assess this matter carefully before "blindly" following demands. He figures that companies "misguided" enough to allow retirement at age 55 would lose an additional 2,600 days of production per man, plus an additional 15 per cent in lost time due to holidays, vacations and sick pay benefits. This would mean the company would be deprived of the man's working ability 35 per cent of the time between ages of 25 and 65.

One company official calls this "time paid for but nor worked" and maintains that the natural demand for more leisure is in danger of causing big economic trouble. As he puts it: "There is a point beyond which productivity can't stand more absences."

When we were young, the world was a wonderful place in which to live. The good guy always wore the white hat; nice guys finished first; fairy tale characters lived happily ever after.

This last childhood belief is perhaps the fondest remembered today when we have to face the reality of My Lai, the Sharon Tate murders and pllution.

How wonderful it would all be if everyone really did live happily everafter. How horrible it was the day we finally grew up and realized it just isn't so.

Today, when we see a re-run of a Walt Disney feature-length cartoon or read a bedtime story to our children, we are caught up once again in the adventures of Peter Pan or the travels of Doothy on the road to Oz.

Now that we are adults and no longer believe this happily-ever-aafter jazz, we can't help but wonder just what did happen to all those fiary tale characters whose stories ended that way.

Just for the fun of it, let's rekindle the fires of imagination that were snuffed out when we reached maturity and try to visualize these characters as they'd be today. Perhaps the best way to bring them up-to-date would be by reading some of their recent correspondence . . . .

DEAR DOC:

Prince has just taken Lisa to the doctor for her measles shot so I thought I'd take a minute to drop you a line. I really don't know how to begin, but I guess the best way would be to come right to the point.

Could you or any of the other fellows see your way clear to loanign us $500? I know it's a lot of money, but we're desperate and don't know who to turn to.

Our mortgage payment on the castle is overdue, the finance company has threatened to repossess the coach and Johnny needs his teeth straightened. Honestly, Doc, I'm sick with worry about our debt. I've come pretty close to taking another bite out of that apple a couple of times.

I certainly hope you can help us. Say helloo to Grumpy, Sneezy, Dopey and the rest of the gang.

Love,

Snow White.

DEAR WICKED STEPMOTHER:

I know I haven't written in a long tiem and I'm sorry. I hope you're not angry, because I need your help. You remember that fairy godmother who helped me win the prince? Well, after my divorce came through, she suggested I move in with her and now I realize she didn't get her name for nothing.

I'm a nervous wreck trying to avoid her and I want to get out of here. I was wondering if I could move back in with you and my two ugly step-sisters. I'll cook and sew and do all the chores if you'll only take me back.

Desperately,

Cinderella.

DEAR ANN LANDERS:

What would you do with a husband who sits around the house all day drinking and complaining about his troubles? He used to be a bricklayer and a good one before he started his own contracting business.

Then he got into scrapes with one labour union after another and finally he lost the business and started hitting the bottle pretty hard. It wasn't too bad but then his two no-good brothers moved in with us and they're as shiftless and messy as he is. It's all I can do to keep the wolf from the door.

Please don't use my name in your column. I'm enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Practical Pig.

DEAR PAPA GEPPETTO:

You've got to help me, Papa; they've got me in this padded cell and they won't listen to anything I tell them.

It all started when I applied for welfare and told the guy interviewing me that my last address was the inside of a whale. He got sort of mad at me and asked if I was some kind of wise guy.

Then he started screaming that I couldn't use a cricket, a cat and a goldfish as references and when I told him I'd bring them in to talk to him on my behalf, he made a phone call and two attendants brought me here.

Please come and get me out, Papa. There's a real nut in this cell with me and he keeps threatening to chop me up for kindling wood and you know how that terrifies me.

Love,

Pinocchio.

Battle against measles starts here in fall

A campaign to eventually eradicate German measles will be undertaken in the area this coming fall.

In light of recent predictions of a German measles (rubella) epidemic in Canada, This Week contacted Gertrude Tucker, director of nursing for the Oshawa-Ontario County Health Unit, who revealed plans to combat the disease.

"Grades 1 and 2 in Oshawa and the county will be vaccinated against German measles once the fall school term starts," said Miss Tucker. "This means about 10,000 children will receive immunization."

The nursing director said that in the future, other grades will receive the vaccine with the hope that gradually the disease will be eliminated.

"Anyone can get the German measles if they haven't had them before. It's usually a school child who takes it home to his parents."

At the moment, there is no provision for immunizing adults in Oshawa against the disease. Miss Tucker added that since the province is providing the vaccine, it's up to provincial authorities to decide whether other children will be vaccinated as well.

In any event, the immunization program won't begin until the start of the school year when the children are readily available.

The nursing director added that parents will have to give their consent before the vaccine is administered.

"We ask for parental consent before we undertake any immunization program. We wouldn't be very popular if we didn't."

Health authorities across the country have been strongly advocating an immunization program for the German measles for the past few weeks.

The Canadian Pediatric Society has said that an epidemic of the disease is expected within the next six months and could leave as many as 2,000 malformed babies in its wake.

Its danger lies almost entirely in the fact that mothers in early pregnancy who contact the disease can produce babies with mental retardation, heart disease, deafness or blindness.

No girls or women are vaccinated in an immunization program in case they might unknowingly be pregnant

There is a 60 percent chance of damage to a fetus in the first four weeks of pregnancy, declining to 40 percent at the end of 12 weeks and less after that.

$34.33 for a post that's still missing

Floyd C. Wannamaker of 1361 Cedar Street is upset over a $34.33 bill he got from the city of Oshawa to replace a cedar post which has not been replaced.

Says Wannamaker, in a letter to council:

"I do not deny running into the guard post at the corner of Phillip Murray and Stevenson Road and breaking off one four or five foot cedar post, plus damaging my car. I then continued home and called the City Police to notify them of the accident. The morning this mishap occured, at approximately 8:30 A.M., the roads were glare ice and had not been sanded south of Wentworth Street. As you are well aware Stevenson Road south of Wentworth is very narrow. I was keeping to the side due to the road conditions and so that any oncoming traffic could pass me safely, as I approached the corner my car slid and hit the post.

"I have worked and lived in the city for a number of years and pay $516.07 property tax for the current year and I tried to be a good citizen by reporting this mishap. I now feel that by doing so, I am being taken advantage of by being charged such an outrageous price for one small post.

"I travel this route daily and I feel that this accident would not have occurred if the roads had been sanded."

Drug Abuse News No. 5

SHOULD YOU "TURN ON," "TUNE IN" OR "DROP OUT?"

There are dangerous effects from the Hallucinogenic drugs that unscrupulous "pushers" are illegally selling. The users experience distortion of sensory perception, with a lessened ability to distinguish between fact and fantasy.

The mental effects are not predictable. They may include illusions, panic, anti-social behavior, and impulses to violence and self destruction.

The Hallucinogenic drugs sold illegally come from secret laboratories with no controls for purity. There are no standards for comparison. Unfortunately, in this troubled world, the experimenters and dissenters consider it smart to use them.

The next of these Public Service messages will discuss LSD. It is so powerful that one speck can cause hallucinations for over eight hours.

Hayfever not very funny, says pharmacist

There is an intake of air in short gasps like the sound a Sunday School teacher might make at a showing of "Beyond The Valley of the Dolls".

Then the room rocks to the explosive sound of rapidly-expelled air, followed by much sniffing and snorting. Another Oshawanian has fallen victim to this season's most-common ill — hayfever.

If you're one of these unfortunate types, you're probably long on misery and short on sympathy. You have the misfortune of having one of those maladies (gout and sunburn are two others) that other people find amusing.

About the only consolation you have is that you are not alone. Gus Miller, a local pharmacist, estimates that you have thousands of fellow citizens as company.

"With Oshawa's population of 80,000-plus, I would say that a good 10 percent of our residents suffer from hayfever or similar allergies," he said in an interview.

While ragweed is the common culprit in this, a person can also be allergic to such things as grass, trees or even molds that form in the water at bathing beaches.

Miller does not consider hayfever funny. He has seen too many people come into the drug store with some very uncomfortable symptoms.

"These include difficulty in breathing, congested sinuses, scratchy, irritated eyes, sneezing and sinus headaches. The more serious cases can develop into asthmatic attacks."

The pharmacist said that while the allergy season begins as early as the spring, the peak period is almost upon us. In August, ragweed pollen is circulating freely.

Wtih this in mind, he and his fellow druggists are stocking up on such antihistamines as Chlor-Tripolon, Actifed and Contac-C to dole out to the stuffed-up customers who come staggering into the store.

These remedies and others come in tablet form but can also be purchased in a syrup for children who might have trouble swallowing the pills. Some of the tablets are so foul-tasting that many children panic and simply can't make them go down no matter how hard they try.

This malady may be with you right from infancy or may start all of a sudden later in life. Some people have been known to outgrow it for no apparent reason.

Miller described such an allergy as caused by an irritant in the body which triggers production of a substance called histamine responsible for the hayfever symptoms. Thus the name antihistamine for pills to counteract it.

The pharmacist cautioned that while antihistamines might control the milder cases of hayfever, a serious sufferer should check with a physician who might give cortisone derivatives by prescription.

Doctors can also test a patient to see what he is allergic to and start him on a weak serum in the fall, gradually increasing the dosage throughout the year so that by the hayfever season, he will have built up a certain amount of immunity.

These treatments have had varying degrees of success, depending on the individual. For those unfortunates who still suffer greatly from plant allergies after trying all the cures, Miller has only one consolation.

"Once the first frost kills off the allergy-causing plants, the sufferer finds relief."

Until then, however, he'll have to continue popping pills, using up boxes of Kleenex and walking around with a red nose and bloodshot eyes that make him look like a sickly rabbit.

The knee is dead?

What's all the hoopla about the downfall of the leg? Women have been standing on their own two feet for decades and they're not about to return to the dark ages by shrouding the leg, a most appealing part of the female anatomy, under layers of cloth. Besides, the world's top designers don't suggest they should.

While the midi is surely fashion's most controversial plunge, it heralds the return of sublety to leg fashion. Everyone knows a peek at a well-clad, shapely leg can be even more provocative than blatant legginess. Fashion hosiery has clearly been geared to the premise that attention to the leg is mandatory to create proper proportion and fit beneath a wardrobe of lengths.

The designers agree. Hemlines for every occasion have been lowered, but they've been slit, slashed, buttoned and shaped. Some are asymetric and some are still short!

To wear the midi with style you'll need a wardrobe of pantyhose. If it's midi and slit, black and slinky, accessorize with a delicate leg pattern of fragile flowers and scrolls forming a trellis down the side of the leg in fantasy black, to accent a late day midi slit.

If it's midi and sportive, worn unbuttoned in front, leap into a ribbed pinstripe. These pantyhose take the ribs all the way up to the waist without a welt seam or line to show, no matter how high you dare unbutton the midi to reveal the leg.

If it's a gaucho pant slit thigh-high, bathe the leg in a mist opaque color to complement the ensemble. In fact, no matter what the length or shape of your current fashion preferences, the tonal harmony of mist opaques create a slimming, pulled-together appearance. Round-the-clock pantyhose come in subtle shades such as cadet blue, cocoa creme or scarlet to tempt the eye to the ankle, or knee, or thigh.

Whatever turn the hemline takes, the silhouette is close, closer, closest to the body. Clothes fairly slither over the figure and demand pantyhose for a long, smooth and comfortable line beneath.

Women flatly refused to be fettered, bound and pinched. They're always on the move. They want comfortable leg fashions that fit and move with them.

They know that being well dressed today is a head to toe proposition.

The midi goes to the paddock. Marita tweed trimmed in red with detachable capelet. By William Forhman Fashions Ltd., shown in the Terrace Dining Room at Greenwood Raceway during Grand Circuit Week, the grand prix of harness racing.

G. L. ROBERTS
DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION

We have examined the Revenue Fund and Capital (Building) Fund Balance Sheets of the Ontario County Board of Education as at December 31, 1969 and the Revenue Fund Statement of Revenue and Expenditure for the year then ended. Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures and such tests of accounting records and other supporting evidence as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion these financial statements present fairly the financial position of the Board as at December 31, 1969 and the result of its operations for the year then ended, in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted for Ontario school boards.

The night shift

For the second week, the Cadillac Hotel is hosting Bambie — "Canada's sex change". This exotic dancer and her group, the Magnetic Force you might say, are an attractive combination and are drawing good crowds.

The Carsons, direct from Las Vegas will be entertaining at the Carousel Inn. Composed of three fellows and one girl, they know all the popular favorites.

The Genosha Hotel is featuring rock and roll with the John & Judy Quintet, direct from the Brass Rail in London, Ont.

For popular music and dancing, the Spruce Villa Hotel in Whitby is offering Aquarius. This group of four female vocalists originates from Northern Ontario and will be entertaining for one week only.

Jim's Stage Door in Whitby Hotel, is featuring this week the Dusty King Trio, a la versatile.

'Canada's Top Country and Western Female Recording Artist', Shirley Field and her show are billed at the Lancaster Hotel this weekend. The show includes the comedy of Bill French, and is also their last Canadian personal appearance before an extensive tour in the United States.

The Georgian Motor Hotel favorites, the Par Four are entertaining again to good crowds.

The Rainvilles, on their second week stint are still playing at the Central Hotel.

MOVIES

Take the children to the Regent Theatre to see Walt Disney's, The Boatniks with Robert Morse, Stephanie Powers and slapstick comedian Phil Silvers.

Airport, almost a household word now is still playing at the Plaza Theatre to the big crowds.

At the Odeon Theatre, starting today, it's "Moonshine War" with Richard Widmark and Allan Alda. The Odeon Manager calls it a "Hillbilly picture."

The Marks didn't have its weekend bill lined up at press time, but until tomorrow it's "Sleeping Beauty" and there's an added attraction called the "Horse in the grey flannel suit."

INCORPORATED

Letters patent of incorporation have been granted to York Building Supplies Ltd., of Oshawa it is announced in the current issue of the Ontario Gazette.

At the movies

The world famous French screen star, Alain Delon will be in Montreal next week in conjunction with the forthcoming North American premiere of his smash-hit BORSALINO.

The premiere will take place simultaneously in Montrel and New York on Wednesday, August 19, 1970.

BORSALINO, after its original release in Paris, France this Spring is now considered as a film with "the greatest number of admissions in any city anywhere in the world in the history of the motion picture industry". It was directed by Jacques Deray from a screenplay by Jean-Claude Carriere, Claude Sautet and Jean Cau. Along with Alain Delon is another famous French star, Paul Belmondo, and the film is based on the story of two young men who rise to the top of the underworld in Marseilles during the 1930's.

Alain Delon, during his visit to Montreal will meet representatives from the Canadian press, radio and T.V. and local Civic and Government dignatories.

BORSALINO is scheduled for general release throughout the rest of Canada bearing English sub-titles late September, early October this year.

Controller Margaret Shaw on a visit to the White Cross Centre's new garden. With Mrs. Shaw at tea, from left: Alice Rickard and Ed Hasted, one of the gardeners.

A new "friendship garden" at 187 Simcoe Street South is making a lot of friends this summer.

Just a year ago, the area behind Oshawa's White Cross Centre was nothing but a pile of junk. Today it's green, treed and shrubbed and cosy.

Sod was laid last summer, cedars were planted in October and flower beds went in this Spring. The Oshawa Kinsmen club and the junior Rotarians or Rotaract did much of the volunteer work, under the direction of Rundle Garden Centre.

With fences, benches, picnic tables, umbrellas and everything-for-the-garden, Mrs. Olive Petley, chairman of the Friendship Garden Committee says, "it just couldn't be any better."

DURHAM COMPUTERS

A proposal by City Treasurer Frank Markson could save the city as much as 20 per cent on data processing costs for some of its accounts. Board of Control adopted the plan to use data processing facilities at Durham College for such things as social services department payrolls and public works department accounts. Cost of the scheme is an initial $95 plus a $45.50 monthly charge over 13 months.

MASONRY PAINT

If you're planning to paint exterior masonry this summer don't forget that masonry contains a high percentage of alkali. Be sure to choose a paint that is alkali resistant. There are latex masonry paints, portland cement paints, and oil base stucco and masonry paints all designed especially for use on masonry.

Will Mosport fest bring weekend jam to Strawberry Fields, 720 Fifth Ave or contact your nearest Ticketron office, the ad asked.

Well, one of This Week's reporters telephone Strawberry Fields in New York.

"Yes, tickets are still available. Just send the money."

"Yes, the festival is definitely on . . . but not at Moncton. It's being held at Mosport, Ontario."

Mosport officials, meanwhile, have confirmed that the race track has been leased to Les Productions Sportives Ville Marie Inc. of Montreal complete with all the facilities for three days.

The Strawberry Cup Trophy Race, according to a Mosport official is planned to be held in a "carnival /ike" atmosphere and yes, there will be a carnival of sight and sound. . . .

According to one Mosport official, the provincial department of tourism is aware of the plans, and has discussed it with the OPP. Meanwhile, a spokesman for the OPP at Newcastle talks of "backing up traffic all the way to Hamilton, if necessary," and that as far as the detachment is concerned there will not be a festival of the rock or pop kind, even if it is called a Strawberry Cup Trophy Race.

Meanwhile, thousands of kids who have bought tickets to the bombed-out Strawberry Fields Festival in Moncton have been told their $15 tickets will be honored at Mosport.

If that doesn't look like a freeway traffic jam for this coming Friday night, I don't know what does.

Cable man calls on broadcasters to be constructive

All participants in the Canadian broadcasting system should be thinking about constructive opportunities for cable television to complement the activities of the Canadian broadcaster, according to W. E. Jarmain, 32, Chairman of the Canadian Cable Television Association.

In his first public statement since his election, Jarmain, London, notes that under the Broadcasting Act cable television, which offers a valuable service to over 3 million Canadians, ranks equally with other broadcasting services, and its unique flexibility could be used to further the objectives of that Act.

Suggesting the Canadian Radio Television Commission revise its proposed guidelines on cable tv, Jarmain says "they should encourage cable to facilitate the development of broadcasting, instead of inhibiting cable viewing. There are plenty of opportunities for cable to complement the activities of Canadian broadcasters."

His illustrations, designed to demonstrate cable's ability to help broadcasters include: making time available to broadcasters on a cable channel for repeats or for new extra progams; distributing selective programs from distant Canadian stations; using network feeds not being aired by local affiliate stations.

Agreeing with the CRTC objectives, within the scope of the Broadcasting Act, Jarmain feels it would be improper to curtail cable services to the public on the premise that its development will cause financial hardship to broadcasters. The 18-year old Canadian cable industry has generally not had such an effect. "While compromises among conflicting objectives may be necessary in certain instances, the right of persons to receive information, regardless of origin, is a consideration of the highest order."

MAN KILLED

Alphonse Gemmell, 49, of McDonald's Corner was killed Thursday in a train crash at Cobourg. Gemmell, a lineman, was killed when 26 cars of a CP Rail freight derailed and smashed into a stopped work train. Jake Kirkham and Edward Gardiner, two other workers, were injured slightly.

ORONO

The Orono chamber of commerce wants to become part of Clarke Township when the new Oshawa area regional government goes into effect. The chamber outlined its petition in a letter last week to the Oshawa area planning and development study.

Cable TV this week

By James Sabyan

No matter how hard I struggle, that blood letting game of lacrosse is beginning to grow on me. Perhaps its the exposure to the sport; taping the games and then watching the playback. But it probably is the excitement of the playoffs.

Oshawa has now eliminated the Peterborough team and will start on some of the Toronto teams and as soon as the scheduled are announced the time for replay will be booked.

Talking of things athletic, the Montreal Expos are the feature attraction during this week's sports broadcasts at 6 p.m. Dave Stewart — the great Deppelin — went down over the weekend to talk to some of the members and a player a night is planned for the sports report.

Think of some poor Cinematographer strapped into ahelicopter filming scenes like the Niagara gourge from 10 feet up or chasing an eagle through mountain passes to get enough film footage to assemble one of the most unusual and breathtaking 60 minutes of film called "Helicopter Canada." Not only did this film win awards by the bucket, but it gave several photogs nervous breakdowns. One operator, after a particularly spectacular scene — Niagara Falls from 10 feet above the swirling waters — walked off the job muttering words to the effect that the National Film Board were nuts to try this thing.

Helicopter Canada is a superb film if somewhat scarey at parts. The scene of the Rocky Mountains is breath taking and even more so when they chase an eagle down the mountain passes dodging rocks, trees, and updrafts.

The Orono Youth Theatre opens this week and reports from the theatre will be given to the viewers after each opening night. Last Saturday a tape was made of the rehearsals, in the muggy heat, and that show is on tonight along with a couple of the young people involved. You got to hand it to these kids, they try hard and from watching the rehearsals the results are par excellence.

On Highway No. 2 Between Oshawa and Whitby

Heat complaints won't get sympathy from Geo Morrison

by jo aldwinckle

Anyone complaining about the hat these days will get no sympathy from George Morrison. He likes it this way.

George nearly froze to death one winter in the Oshawa area so the hotter it gets, the better he likes it.

"I was working for an automobile wholesale company which sold automotive parts to many garages in this area," he said recently. "One cold winter day, it was just about quitting time when the phone rang.

"It was a service station in Stouffville and the owner said he was out of oil and anti-freeze and aked if someone could get him some.".

George explained that it was the policy of the company he was working for to please a customer whenever possible and since everybody else had gone home, he volunteered to take over the supplies.

"I wanted to get the job over as fast as I could, so I took a short-cut across the back road from Claremont to Stouffville. Most of the road was clear, but there was a lot of snow piled up on the sides.

"Just as I topped a hill, there was a huge snow drift right in the middle of the road and when I swerved to miss it, I hit the ditch."

George got out of the cab to try to put grab chains on the rear wheels. He shovelled out as much as he could but the freezing weather and a long day's work exhausted him quickly.

"I guess I wasn't thinking properly and I sat down beside one of the rear wheels to try to figure out what to do. This was my big mistake because I dozed off into what almost became an endless sleep."

Geroge said thathe became completely buried under drifting snow and would have died except for what he calls an act of God.

"The Bell Telephone in Stouffiville had sent one of their vehicles across that same road to fix a wire that ad come down. The fellows could only see the roof of the cab of my truck and they almost went on but for some reason decided to dig down and see if someone was in the truck.'

George said they were able to get him to a hospital in time and although he spent three weeks there he came out of it wihtout any ill effects, except a dislike for cold weather.

"As soon as I feel a chill in the air, I get an odd feeling and I head for the house where I can keep warm.'

He considers himself particularly lucky, not only because his life was saved, but because he made himself two life-long friends as well.

"The two Bell Telephone employees turned out to be the most wonderful guys a fellow could find. They never missed a day of visiting me in the hospital."

MP hits White Paper as typical abortion

In June 1968 thousands of Canadians voted for the Liberal Party of Canada. They did so because it was led by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, a man many saw as a great reformer; a man believed to be committed to social justice. Rarely have so many been so wrong.

That's how Oshawa MP Edward Broadbent summed it up last week in a speech to party followers at Halifax, where the Oshawa MP was beating the campaign drum for the leadership of the New Democratic Party.

Said Broadbent: "In his two years in office Trudeau has done less for the average or poor Canadian than any Prime Minister since the Second World War. From John Diefenbaker Canadians obtained hospital insurance. From Lester Pearson we received the Canada Pension Plan. However, with our present Prime Minister Canadians have merely an exciting, titillating social image, totally unsupported by progressive substance.

"According to Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures, we now have the highest level of unemployment since the recession year of 1961. Our agricultural economy in the West is now as bad as it was in the 1930's. At a time when 200,000 dwelling units per year are needed in Canada, housing starts in 1970 are down by 50% from last year — and of those constructed only 7% are in the low income category.

"Contrary to the myth the fact is that the Prime Minister has been at best indifferent to the expectations of the average Canadian. At worst, he has been deliberately callous about their real and legitimate needs."

In commenting on the Benson White Paper, Broadbent called it a "typical Liberal abortion."

The New Democratic Party, Broadbent said, believes in genuine tax reform. "It believes in real not fake economic justice. For this reason, we do not accept the White Paper.

"As a party we are committed to fight for those without power, for those without wealth, for the poor and for the average. We have no illusions about the difficulties. Nor do we claim to have all the answers. But we do know whose side we are on."

One of the lucky ones to have had a trip to Japan this summer is Miss Charlotte Abbott, recently returned. Miss Abbot was "completely fascinated" by the country and its people and would like to go back in a couple of years and stay longer.

Her first and overwhelming impression of Tokyo was the congestion of people and traffic, in fact, every city was the same in this regard.

"The people are well-mannered and helpful," she said. "I noticed both English and German influences. They are great adaptors and gadget cracy, but their gadgets work. They take enormous pride in their manufactured articles.

"They are clean people and in the cities wear western dress mostly. I saw a few mini skirts. The older women still wear the kimono and clog-type sandals with wooden platform soles.

"The Japanese have a great desire to excel. They are the most literate people in the world. On our tours we saw school children being taken by their teachers to historic sites, museums and galleries. They were very orderly and we noticed how gently the teachers shepherded them.

"In less than thirty years the Japanese have rebuilt Tokyo, Yokohama, Nagasaki, Hisoshima and other cities from the ground up and, at the same time, expanded their economy to compete successfully in the markets of the world.

"They have to import iron ore and petroleum yet their steel mills are larger than those at Pittsburhg. They cultivate every yard of arable land and terrace and irrigate mountainsides, to grow rice, a mainstay of their diet.

"They have long known the value of nutrition and social reofrm has made it possible for a better distribution of food. This has resulted in improved physique. They are a small'boned, lean people — no fat ones and the younger generation is taller and heavier than its parents.

"This was noticeable in the theatre where the famele roles are played by youths. The "amidens" were mostly bigger than the men. We attended a performance at the Kubuki Theatre famous for classical comedy, satire and drams. The matinee lasted from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m."

Miss Abott was also impressed by the efficiency and politeness of the police.

"They are not armed but carry long night-sticks. Student demonstrations are not infrequent and the police do not interfere unless there are indications of violence, stone-throwing, possible damage to property or harm to persons.

"Then, a special police squad arrives in trucks. They wear steel helmets and carry body shields, large enough for a man to crouch behind with a vent for a peeophole. These police are armed and the demonstrators know that they mean business.

"The trucks can be used as paddy wagons or ambulances, sometimes as both at the same time."

Miss Abbott found the Japanese honest to a degree and helpful to strangers. She had no qualms about being out at night and during her entire visit saw only one drunk and "he wasn't obnoxious, just a bit of a nuisance."

"The cultures of all the world meet in Tokyo," she said. "The Japanese government never stints in bringing exhibitions and you can see the best of European art in the galleries.

"The Japanese are solemnly eager to learn. They are crowding into Expo '70 at Osaka, not to be entertained, but to be educated.

"Theirs is a beautiful country and their post-war philosophy is to make it the most prosperous, civilized and respected."

VEGA 2300 ANNOUNCED

Little Chev - small, fun, comfortable, easy on budget is word

General Motors this week revealed details of the Vega 2300 — the new small car line it expects to become a leader in the economy market.

"Vega 2300 is unlike any other Chevrolet ever built," John Z. DeLorean, General Motors vice president and Chevrolet general manager, declared.

"It meets the growing desire for a North American-built car which — besides being small in size — is fun to drive, safe, comfortable, economical to own and operate, easy to maintain and long lasting in both construction and styling.

"Vega sets a new standard of customer value in the economy market with performance and handling far superior to any car in its field."

Vega 2300 models go on sale this Fall. They include a 2-door sedan, a 2-door hatchback coupe and a sporty 2-door "Kammback" wagon — all four-passenger models. There is also a unique one-passenger Vega panel express truck available with a second passenger seat.

With a wheelbase of 97 inches, an overall length under 170 inches and a sedan weight of 2190 pounds, the Vega is generally the same size as other economy cars but offers significant differences.

It is nearly eight inches lower and over four inches wider than the best selling foreign car. It has greater passenger room and trunk space. Its lower center of gravity and wider tread helps the Vega hug the road in freeway driving.

Vega's excellent handling is due to a specially designed front suspension and steering system that gives high cornering ability, responsive steering and less driver fatigue on long trips. A new custom tailored braking system includes standard front disc brakes.

Computer-selected full coil springs at each wheel plus extensive body sound deadening give a smoother, quieter ride than the usual economy car.

Vega's most innovative feature is its new lightweight overhead cam four-cylinder engine. This engine — specially designed and built in North America for the Vega — meets performance needs of North American drivers while giving impressive fuel economy and low emissions.

The 140 cubic inch engine (or 2300 cubic centimeters as indicated in the Vega 2300 name) develops 90 horsepower. There is also a 110 horsepower optional version. Both are designed to operate efficiently on the new no-lead or low-lead gasolines (see page 6). A new open combustion chamber design contributes to more complete burning of fuel and improved emission control.

The Vega engine is the first in the industry to use a new high-silicon aluminum alloy and a recent breakthrough in aluminum casting technique in its lightweight engine block. The result is a large piston displacement engine with high torque output at moderate speeds and good fuel economy.

In Chevrolet tests thus far, the Vega has been getting about 30 miles per imperial gallon with a standard engine and 3-speed manual transmission.

Vega's unitized Body by Fisher contains a number of "firsts" in the economy car market including:

— An exclusing new power-flow ventilation system which constantly provides a controlled supply of outside air to the passenger compartment. The system is in operation whenever the ignition is on and uses functional louvers at the rear of the car to exhaust air.

— Steel side-guard beams in the doors. Vega also has the other Chevrolet safety features for occupant protection, accident prevention and anti-theft (see complete list.)

— Advanced double-panel roof construction for added strength and greater sound isolation.

— New, more comfortable full foam molded seats front and rear with all-vinyl trim.

— Flush, lift-up door handles and a radio antenna in the windshield add to Vega's aerodynamic body design.

AGAINST PLAN

Apartment dwellers, unsatisfied over plans for the new Mary St. N. Beatrice St. extensions are worried about the safety of their children. They plan to petition city council for the installation of an overhead pedestrian walkway for nearly 300 children in the Tower on the Green Apartment building on Mary. St. N. The reason for the elevated walkway is that children will readily use the novelty and hopefully insure less accidents. The only plans are for stop lights at Beatrice-Simcoe St. intersection and a stop sign at Mary St.

NEW PASTOR

Pastor L. R. Krenzier, his wife and three daughters have taken up residence at 169 Labrador Drive in conjunction with Pastor Krenzier's new position as a member of the executive staff of the Ontario-Quebec Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists. He replaces John M. Howard who left Oshawa in July to become director of Lay and Youth Activities in the Congo.

REGISTRAR NAMED

A former Oshawa alderman and provincial representative has been named Master of Titles and Registrar of Deeds for Ontario County. Albert V. Walker replaced John Roblin who retires this fall after 20 years' service. Mr. Walker takes up his new duties Nov. 1.

AT CONFERENCE

Durham College will be represented at the First National Youth Conference on Travel and Exchange in Ottawa Sept. 1. Bobb Gibbs, 29, president of Durham's student council, is one of 30 delegates from across Canada attending the conference. Grants of $15,000 each have been contributed by the Secretary of State and Canadian Tourist Association. Delegates will be guests of Algonquin College.

DOWNTOWN TREES

Urban Renewal Driector Bill Paynter has suggested to the city's parks and property commiteee that shade trees would do a lot to enhance the downtwon area of Oshawa. He expressed the hope that downtown merchants would co-operate in planting the trees in concrete planters along downtown streets.

REDUCE CONGESTION

Two major road alignment proposals are under study by the traffic and urban renewal committees for traffic congestion at Olive Avenue between Albert and Ritson Rd. Deputy Works Commissioner Bob Richardson has described the two schemes which would see west-bound traffic channelled along Banting Avenue to the north on one of two routes.

VISIT MAN AND WORLD

Twleve Oshawa guides returned recently from a 10-day camping trip to Brompaon Lake, Que. where they camped with six guides from Windsor and 18 Quebec guides. Highlights of the camp program included an exchange day where the Quebec and Ontario guides switched campsites and a swim regatta. The guides attended Man and His World for a day in Montreal. Ruth Neal of Oshawa was chosen best junior camper with Patricia Beal best senior camper

This creature is not out to destroy our planet

Oshawa residents who hear a high, whining sound and look out the window to see a strange creature spraying chemicals along the roadside might be tempted to call the police.

Their fears, while understandable, are groundless. The odd-looking fellow hasn't come to destroy our planet, but to save it.

He's John Thiebaud of the Oshawa Garden Service and his victims are red spiders and aphids who have been helping themselves to servings of cedar and other shrubs.

John's appearance admittedly is a little strange, especially on these hot summer days, because he must be fully clothed and wear a mask to protect himself from the insecticide he is spraying on the plants.

He used an atomized sprayer with a chemical about 10 times the strength of that which you might use in your garden.

The mist spray is systemic, meaning that it penetrates the plant to get at burrowing insects feeding there. John says that red spiders, a common enemy of the cedar, will turn its leaves brown and can eventually destroy it.

The spider is no bigger than the head of a pin so that you might not realize your plant has problems until it's too late. John combats the menace by spraying customers' plants and hedges three times a year.

Those amateur ecologists who might be worried that the toxic spray John uses might be harmful to other plants or to human beings can rest assured that everything is under control.

The Osawa Garden Centre is licensed under the Pesticides Act (1967) and John is subjected to periodic spot checks to make sure that everything is being carried out according to regulations.

It isn't a Martian or a Viet Cong flamethrower. It's John Thiebaud of Oshawa Garden Service spraying shrubs with an insecticide.

Six from Oshawa graduate from GMI

There are six Oshawa and area residents among the 20 Canadians who received degrees from General Motors Institute in mechanical, industrial or electrical engineering last week.

Bachelor's degrees were conferred on 450 Mechanical, Industrial and Electrical engineers. Another 87 scholarship students from General Motors Overseas Operations were granted diplomas for completing special two-year cooperative programs.

General Motors Institute is an accredited college which provides General Motors with about 25 percent of its engineers. The student body of 2,900 is made up to top-flight high school graduates selected by GM units for appointment to cooperative programs in either Mechanical Engineering, Industrial Engineering or Electrical Engineering, or Industrial Administration. For the first four and one-half years, students alternate between periods of academic instruction in the classrooms and laboratories of GMI and coordinated work experience at their GM units. They qualify for a Bachelor's degree by successfully completing a project at their GM unit during the last semester of the five-year program and submitting a thesis to GMI. Of the more than 8,000 graduates of GMI, two-thirds have remained with General Motors.

More than 4,000 relatives and friends of graduates from across the country, and some foreign countries, attended the exercises

Receiving degrees from GM of Canada, Oshawa, were: Stephen M. Hurley, 88 Hertle Ave., Toronto; Keith T. Heldon, 190 Nonquon Road, Oshawa; Christopher H. West, 210 Gilbert Street, Whitby; in mechanical engineering — Douglas L. Anderson, 49 Ritson Road, Oshawa; John M. Christie, Lakeshore Road, Kelowna, B.C.; Peter J. Heinrich, 56 Larwood Blvd., Scarborough; John E. Quantrill, 684 Grierson, Oshawa; Brian G. Weir, 642 Armous Road, Peterborough; Edward J. Zulinski, 140 Nonquon Road, Oshawa.

Mr. Anderson, Mr. Quantrill, both of Oshawa, and Mr. Hurley, of Toronto, also received their masters degrees (M.A.Sc.-Management Sciences) at McMaster University, University of Western Ontario and University of Waterloo respectively in connection with the GMI Bachelor-Master Plan.

FROM SCOTLAND

Mrs. R. G. Collison of King St. East, Oshawa entertained Mrs. Clarence Bowen and Miss Jerrie Weir, of Toronto and Mrs. Annie McIlwain. Mrs. McIlwain, a native of Hamilton, Scotland is returning Mrs. Collison's visit to Scotland last year, and is also visiting Mrs. Bowen, her sister, Alex Burns and her brother and family.

THE APARTMENT

It's not bad when it's got the "extras"

A number of Oshawa apartment dwellers have found a way to have fun in the sun without the inconveniences that go with a trip to the beach.

Rather than fighting traffic on their way to the lake and other bathers for space once they arrive, these people simply take the elevator down to their apartment-side pool.

Ten minutes after they arrive home from a hot, sticky day at the office, they can be relaxing in water that is both cool and clean, something that cannot be said for all our public beaches.

This Week polled a number of apartment tenants and superintendents recently and found that more and more apartment dwellers are seeking out accommodations with this and other extras.

They also look for recreation rooms and saunas when they are making the rounds before deciding which building to call home for the next year or two.

Lois Pappas, an apartment superintendent and rental agent for a number of local apartment buildings, said the indoor pool, with year-round swimming, is even more popular than the outdoor model.

The pools are available to tenants and guests staying with them and, in most cases, a lifeguard is on duty during peak hours.

The superintendents contacted felt that it isn't only the younger people who look for such luxuries when searching out apartments. Many retired Oshawa residents are selling their homes and enjoying these and other benefits that apartment living provides.

Some of the others, depending on the building, are cable television outlets, hydro paid for, free parking and launeries on every floor.

RATES

The rates for the average apartment building with pool and sauna run at the $145 mark for a one-bedroom apartment and $165 for two bedrooms. Some apartments also have three-bedroom units for about $190.

For those people who can do without the conveniences of swimming pools and sauna baths in the building, a one-bedroom apartment can be had for $135 and a two-bedroom for $150.

While most apartment supers are polite and ready to answer the prospective tenant's questions, there isn't the hard sell that you might get in other centres such as Montreal where many apartments go begging for tenants.

The vacancy rate for most of the buildings included in our survey seemed to be about two or three apartments a month.

One reason for this is that Oshawa is becoming the bedroom for more and more Toronto families with the head of the house willing to commute back and forth every working day to get comparable facilities for less.

Different apartments have different rules as far as children are concerned. Some are strictly adult buildings while others try to restrict children to the lower floors. One complex has twin buildings with one for adults only and the other for families.

The superintendents had few complaints about children in the building except those not living there who only come in to do damage or steal any fixtures that have not been bolted down.

One superintendent pointed to a quilted protective cover in an elevator. It was badly torn and had obviously been mended a number of times.

Kids get in

"We put these on when someone is moving and no matter how close a watch I keep, kids get in here and rip them," she said. "Here's a spot where someone has cut a large swastika with a knife."

Despite minor damage, none of the superintendents seemed upset over the provincial government's edict that security deposits cannot be collected as of Jan. 1.

"We get the odd broken window and stuff like that but it usually happens during a family quarrel and once they've cooled off, they generally come good for it," said one super.

Another mentioned tenants doing their barbecuing on apartment balconies as one of his few headaches.

"I usually don't say anything unless one of their neighbours upstairs complains and then I just tell them it's against fire regulations and ask them to stop," he said.

While This Week wouldn't dream of making an apartment superintendent's job any harder, this last statement, we found through a call to the fire department, is actually a little white lie.

Barbecuing, said the department spokesman, is not against fire regulations, but perhaps we could contact the district health unit to see if air pollution regulations prohibit this pastime.

This we did and got the same answer. So if any apartment dwellers are reading this between mouthfuls of barbecued steak, relax and enjoy yourselves.

One of life's little pleasures is to be able to relax around the swimming pool when you're a resident of the Tower on the Green Apartments at Mary Street and Nonquon Road.

and you are allowed to barbecue on the balcony .....

Sports walkathon in October

Plans are underway to harness some of the muscle power of youngsters in the Oshawa area to upgrade the coaching potential for minor summer sports.

Don Buxcey, president of the Oshawa Track and Field Club and chairman of the Sports Training Plan of District F of the Royal Canadian Legion, is seeking city approval for a walkathon this fall.

Buxcey has asked City Council's permission to appear at a meeting to fully outline his plans for the walkathon which is tentatively scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 4.

"The walk could very easily be tied in with or become part of the opening of the Civic Stadium which should be completed at about the same time this fall," he said in a letter to council. "I believe this idea would make the general public very much aware of the extent of minor sport participation and go a long way toward creating enthusiasm, interest and more active support for the district recreation program in general."

The proceeds from the walk would finance coach training clinics with sports celebrities as demonstrators and two or three-day athletic camps in the winter with participant instruction and officials clinics for adults.

"I am suggesting three walks of different lengths to proceed concurrently — 10 miles, 15 miles and 20 miles," said Buxcey. "Most of the route for each walk will be the same and all will finish at the Civic Recreation complex where the showers and swimming pools could be made available to the walkers."

Some of the minor sports associations from which Buxcey has received verbal backing for the walkathon are the Oshawa and District Minor Soccer Association, Legion Minor Baseball League, Oshawa and District Minor Softball Association, Tennis Club and the Track and Field Clubs.

In addition, he is supported by the recreation departments of Oshawa, Whitby and Bowmanville and the Neighborhood Parks Association of Oshawa. He hopes to receive support from the Lacrosse Association and other groups.

"The distribution of funds must be determined previously by a committee made up of key representatives of each minor sport participating and a bonded accountant responsible for collection." he said.

Patty Clynch and David Howe won first rpize for best costumes at the Bonnie and Clyde Day held last week at Somerset Pool and are right in characters as they take aim at the photographer.

A hit with the ladies at the pool was Jan Stacey whose novel bathing attire earned him a dunking later in the afternoon.

The youngsters were packed into the pool like a school of sardines, but no one seemed to care with temperatures in the high 80's.

Donkeys will win

"Jackass News", a newcomer to the publishing scene this week announced plans for a forthcoming baseball game between Oshawa's city fathers and the Jaycees.

A donkey baseball game is planned for the evening of September 12, at Alexandra Park.

In an official letter of invitation to council this week, R. E. Cumin of the Oshawa Jaycees invited Mayor Mackey and members of council to take part in the game. "We'll promise not to practise," Cumin wrote council.

Last summer a similar game in Blackstock saw a number of Oshawa civic officials, combined with Whitby politicians and a few newsmen, take on the Blackstock junior farmers.

The donkeys won that game.

We're guinea pigs : posties

"We are government employees and yet we can't get an NHA house because we can't meet the salary requirements."

This was a complaint registered by Moe Nantais, a shop steward with Local 53, the Oshawa local of the Letter Carriers Union of Canada.

Nantais, John Marchbank, president of Oshawa's Canadian Union of Postal Workers local, Iggy Clark, chairman of the letter carriers' strike committee and Austin Keane, a shop steward with CUPW, discussed the beefs against the post office in a recent interview with This Week.

Nantais continued his statement by saying that he takes home $85 a week and has a wife and four children to support.

"All we want to know is that when we wake up tomorrow we'll have a job to go to and enough money to feed ourselves and our kids," he said.
